State group nixes smelter legislation

By Chuck Stinnett

A coalition of three major Kentucky business and environmental groups came out Monday in opposition to using legislation to address the aluminum smelter power cost dilemma haunting western Kentucky.

The Kentucky Chamber of Commerce, the Kentucky Association of Manufacturers and

■ Coalition pushing incentives for Alcan, Century survival

the Kentucky Resources Council on Monday “stressed that while the intent of the legislation may be laudable, the consequences for everyday consumers would be negative,” according to a Kentucky Chamber news release.

Instead, they urged Gov. Steve Beshear and other state agencies to craft incentives to help retain Century Aluminum’s 700-employee Hawesville smelter and Rio Tinto Alcan’s nearly 500-employee Sebree smelter, much as they would when recruiting new industries or helping other existing industries survive.

“This is an economic development issue,” Chad Harpole, the Kentucky Chamber’s director of public affairs, said.

Kentucky Resources Council Director Tom FitzGerald said “the governor should actively participate in discussions concerning the appropriate incentive package, including both traditional economic development tools and multicounty coal severance dollars, that could be applied to keep these companies competitive.

“In return for that assistance,” FitzGerald said, “we need to obtain a commitment to keep smelters in production and jobs in Kentucky.”

Beshear, however, has declined to get directly involved. In a Feb. 20 letter sent to presidents of Century and Big Rivers, he called for them to “craft a framework of compromise” between themselves.

Henderson part of teacher evaluation pilot program

By Janet Cappiello
Associated Press

FRANKFORT — A pilot program to standardize the way educators are evaluated across Kentucky drew rave reviews Wednesday from some who have been using it. The program is already being used in five Henderson County schools.

The program evaluates teachers using several measurements, such as peer observations and self-reflection, and includes input from students. That’s in stark contrast to the longtime system used in Kentucky that relies only on observations and is conducted differently in all 174 school districts.

Locally, Cairo, Jefferson,

South Middle School, Henderson County High School and the Central Academy are part of the pilot program.

HCC launching 24/7 student call center

■ Service to go live Thursday

By Erin Schmitt

270-831-8341

Seeking to expand personal service for its students, Henderson Community College is launching a 24/7 student service center.

The Go KCTCS! Student Service Center will go live Thursday. The number won’t be released until the day of the launch.

Rebecca Emerson, interim assistant dean of special projects at HCC, said the service center should be a great benefit for students.

“It’s going to increase their success because it’s going to give them the assistance they need at the time they need it,” she said.

Through the call center, students with questions about financial aid, Blackboard issues, or recovering their password information may contact the service center at any time of day, 365 days a year.

The idea for a service center arose out of an initiative from the Kentucky Community and Technical College System 2010-16 business plan, Emerson said.

The service center is located at the Blackboard center in Somerset. The call center operators have access to a specially created database with HCC students information, so they will be able to answer questions immediately.

Depending on which generation students are born, some might prefer talking on the phone while

McConnell preparing for tough re-election bid

By Roger Alford
Associated Press

FRANKFORT — U.S. Senate Republican leader Mitch McConnell is gearing up for a tough re-election fight next year in Kentucky.

He wants to prevent one, too.

McConnell is trying to head off a GOP primary challenge by cozying up to the tea party. He’s also trying to scare off potential Democratic contenders — actress Ashley Judd is one — by providing a glimpse of his no-holds-barred political tactics.

The strategy seems to be working, so far. No serious Republican opponent has emerged. Democrats haven’t fielded a candidate yet, though Judd, a Kentucky native who lives in Tennessee, is considering a run. She would have to re-establish a residence in Kentucky before she could challenge McConnell.

The lack of an opponent hasn’t kept McConnell from sounding an alarm over his potential vulnerability. It’s a tactic rooted in reality and intended to help raise money.

“We know that President Obama’s allies in Washington are doing everything they can to find a candidate to run against me in a primary or a general election,” McConnell said in a statement to The Associated Press. “They’ve made no secrets

Man injured in street-project accident

Gleaner staff

A contract employee was injured Monday afternoon when a piece of pipe fell on his leg at the intersection of Atkinson and Clay streets in Henderson.

The man was in a trench guiding a piece of pipe down the trench when the pipe came loose and landed on him, said Tom Williams, director of engineering for the Henderson Water Utility. The pipe weighed approximately 2,300 to 2,600 pounds.

The man was semiconscious when firefighters arrived at 4:24 p.m. Monday, said Chris Watson, acting assistant fire chief for Henderson Fire Department. The pipe was no longer on his leg when firefighters arrived at the scene, but he was still stuck down in the mud.

It took about 15 minutes for firefighters to extricate him and load him in an ambulance, Watson said. A spine board was used to haul him out of the 7 1/2 foot trench.

The unidentified man was taken to Henderson Methodist Hospital, where he was being evaluated

Monday evening. Williams said it appeared the man was seriously injured.

The injured man works for Scott & Ritter of Bowling Green, which was contracted by the city for the Canoe Creek Phase 2 project. The Atkinson and Clay streets intersection was expected to be closed for the next couple of days so construction could proceed for a major sewer line.

Williams said construction was halted Monday afternoon, and he does not know if it will resume today.

DAYLIGHT SAVINGS TIME

Get ready for darker mornings and brighter evenings.

Daylight saving time will begin at 2 a.m. this Sunday, meaning you should spring forward by moving your clocks ahead by one hour before going to bed Saturday.

That effectively means the sun will come up an hour “later” on Sunday but will stay up an hour “longer” in the evening.

Deaths

Cleo Davis Royer

Cleo Davis Royer, 101, Henderson, passed away at 6 p.m. Sunday, March 3, 2013, at Redbanks nursing home.

She was actively involved with Methodist Hospital, where she served on the hospital foundation board, chaired the annual antique show and started the hospital foundation luminary project.

She was a member of First United Methodist Church, the Mary Lynns and the Nannie Eblen Circle.

Even with all the community projects, she found time for the things she loved, like gardening, needlework, cooking, making and sharing beaded Christmas ornaments, wearing her newest hat and watching University of Kentucky basketball. She also starred in the movie, “A League of Their Own.” But, most of all, she loved being with her family.

She was preceded in death by her husband of 49 years, Clifford Royer; her parents, Jerome and Nettie Davis; two brothers, Kendall Davis and Don Davis; and one granddaughter, Olivia Lawton Sullivan.

Survivors include one daughter, Mitzi Royer-Lawton of Henderson; one son, Richard Royer and his wife, Charlotte, of Henderson; seven grandchildren, Trey Lawton and his wife, Paulina, of Grand Haven, Mich., Michael Lawton of Henderson, Libby Royer of Indianapolis, Chip Royer and his wife, Diane, of Henderson, Hannah Hudson and her husband, Tim, of Henderson, Lynn McCormick of Henderson and Neil Watson and his wife, Beth, of Henderson; 15 grandchildren; three great-great-grandchildren; one niece, Jo Jorgenson of Portland, Ore.; and one nephew, Bill Davis of Portland.

Services will be at 2 p.m. Thursday at Rudy-Rowland Funeral Home. The Rev. James Wofford and the Rev. David E. Latham will officiate. Entombment will be in Fairmont Cemetery Mausoleum.

Friends may call from 3 to 8 p.m. Wednesday and after 11 a.m. Thursday at the funeral home.

Expressions of sympathy may take the form of contributions to First United Methodist Church.

Pallbearers will be Chuck Stagg, Tim Hudson, Dr. Tom Gadiant, Paul Gadiant, Ike Gadiant and George Hardy. Honorary pallbearers will be Bill Latta, Ronnie Marable and Shelby Marable.

James Edward Griffin

James Edward Griffin, 85, Henderson, died at 12:04 p.m. Sunday, March 3, 2013, at St. Mary’s Medical Center in Evansville.

He was a loving husband, father and grandfather. He was also a lifetime member of Immanuel Baptist Temple, where he served as deacon. His love for cars inspired him to a lifetime career as a car salesman, manager and consultant. He worked for Augubrite Auto Sales, Don Mahurin Auto Sales and Expressway Chevrolet, where he retired in 2008 at age 80.

He loved the outdoors and working in his yard. He was also an avid bowler, where he played on the Echo Lanes Bowling Team.

He was preceded in death by his wife of 58 years, Mildred King Griffin, who died in 2006.

Survivors include two daughters, Fran Griffin Miller and her husband, David, and Gayle Renee Griffin O’Nan and her husband, David Y., both of Henderson; one sister, Joy Mitchell of Henderson; one brother, Jerry Griffin of Owensboro; his two precious grandchildren whom he adored, Kristen Elizabeth O’Nan and Jacob Nathaniel O’Nan, both of Henderson; nieces and nephews.

Services will be at 11 a.m. Wednesday at Immanuel Baptist Temple. The Rev. Ken Gazaway will officiate. Entombment will be in Fairmont Cemetery. Friends may call from 2 to 8 p.m. today and from 8 to 10 a.m. Wednesday at Rudy-Rowland Funeral Home.

Expressions of sympathy may take the form of contributions to Immanuel Baptist Temple.

Pallbearers will be David Y. O’Nan, David Miller, Chad Griffin, Jacob O’Nan, Derrick Bulkley and David Mitchell.

Firm involved in crash had numerous tickets

■ Company cited 17 times within two-year period

By Brett Barrouquere
Associated Press

LOUISVILLE — A trucking company involved in a crash that killed six people in Kentucky had accumulated 17 traffic violations over two years before the accident, leading federal authorities to advise states to closely inspect its vehicles.

Despite the warning to states, the Federal Motor Carrier Safety Administration gave Highway Star Inc. a satisfactory rating based on its overall performance during that two-year span ending March 3.

The rating factors in both traffic stops and safety inspections, and the company had a slightly better record of passing the inspections than the national average.

The 17 traffic violations were for speeding, improper lane change, following too closely to another vehicle and failure to wear a seatbelt.

Duane DeBruyne, a spokesman for the agency, said the warning is meant to notify inspectors in each state when a trucking company’s vehicles deserve closer inspections, but the notification doesn’t require them to do so.

Inspectors at weigh stations, state troopers and other authorities have access to the notices.

Phone and email messages left for Highway Star in Oak Park, Mich., were not immediately returned Monday.

During the two-year period, 12 of 59 inspections of Highway Star’s trucks

Emma Elizabeth Foss

Emma Elizabeth Foss, 94, Henderson, passed away at 2:45 a.m. Sunday, March 3, 2013, at Redbanks nursing home.

She was born Feb. 6, 1919, in Brooklyn, N.Y., to William and Sarah Chandler Holst.

She was a homemaker and of the Protestant faith.

She was preceded in death by her parents; her husband, Russell Foss, who died in 1989; one son, Daniel Foss, who died in 1969; and five siblings.

Survivors include one son, David Foss of Philadelphia; one grandson, Kevin Foss and his wife, Laura, of Redmond, Ore.; one granddaughter, Kristin Gardner and her husband, Brian, of Henderson; and four great-grandchildren, Abigail Gardner and Daniel Gardner, both of Henderson, and Sierra Foss and McKenzie Foss, both of Redmond.

Memorial services and burial will be at a later date. Expressions of sympathy may take the form of contributions to Humane Society of Henderson County.

Online condolences can be made at www.tomblinsonfuneralhome.com.

The family wishes to acknowledge their deep appreciation to the staff of Redbanks nursing home for their dedicated and loving care shown to Emma during her stay. May you always remember her smile.

Irene Woods Bailey

WEBSTER COUNTY — Irene Woods Bailey, 90, Webster County, formerly of Sarasota, Fla., died Sunday, March 3, 2013, at the Western Kentucky Veterans Center in Hanson.

She had served in the U.S. Army in World War II. She was an RN and had served as director of nursing at Sarasota Memorial Hospital before retiring.

She was preceded in death by her husband, Robert C. Bailey, who was lost at sea during World War II; and her parents, Laura Johnson and Mary Agnes Couch Woods.

Survivors include two sisters, Clara Jo Grubel of Sarasota and Mary Riecken of Evansville; nieces and nephews.

Services will be at 2 p.m. Thursday at Tomblinson Funeral Home Sebree Chapel. Chaplain Sam Beeny will officiate. Burial will be in Petersburg Cemetery near Sebree with full military rites by Hopkins County Honor Guard.

Friends may call after 1 p.m. Thursday at the funeral home.

Expressions of sympathy may take the form of contributions to the Western Kentucky Veterans Center, 926 Veterans Drive, Hanson, KY 42413.

Billie Keith McKee

WHEATCROFT — Billie Keith McKee, 75, Wheatcroft, died at 6:55 a.m. Sunday, March 3, 2013, at Morganfield Nursing and Rehab.

He was a member of Webb Memorial United Methodist Church in Clay for many years. He had been a hair stylist since he was 13 years old.

He was preceded in death by his parents, Noah and Kate McKee.

Survivors include one brother, Robert McKee of Brownstown, Mich.; nieces and nephews.

Services will be at noon Wednesday at Webb Memorial United Methodist Church in Clay. Brothers Michael Sweeney and Ronnie Cowan will officiate. Burial will be in Rocksprings Cemetery in Wheatcroft.

Friends may call after 9 a.m. Wednesday at the church.

Expressions of sympathy may take the form of contributions to Webb Memorial United Methodist Church, 370 Kentucky 109-North, Clay, KY 42404.

resulted in a vehicle being taken out of service — a rate of 20.3 percent. That’s just below the national average of 20.72 percent of inspections resulting in removals.

Out of 124 driver inspections over that period, seven resulted in drivers being taken out of service — a rate of 5.6 percent.

That’s slightly above the national average of 5.51 percent. Driver inspections involve separate criteria than vehicle inspections and can be done more frequently.

Highway star owns 35 vehicles, but it wasn’t clear how many drivers it employs.

A tractor-trailer owned by the company and driven by 47-year-old Ibrahim Fetic of Troy, Mich., struck Ford Expedition traveling north on Interstate 65 around midday Saturday near Glendale, Ky., about 50 miles south of Louisville.

Killed were 62-year-old driver James Gollnow and his wife, 62-year-old Barbara Gollnow; their 92-year-old friend Marion Chapnoise; 18-year-old Sareena Gollnow, whose relationship to the couple wasn’t immediately clear; and the couple’s foster children 10-year-old Gabriel Zumig and 8-year-old Soledad Smith. The couple was from Wisconsin.

Two other foster children survived and were taken to area hospitals. Police identified them as Hope Hoth, 15, who was transported to a hospital in Lexington with burns and a broken spine; and Aidian Ejnik, 12, who was taken to Kosair Children’s Hospital in Louisville with cuts to the back of his head.

Kentucky State Police Master Trooper Norman Chaffins said Fetic was following the SUV too closely, but no charges had been filed as of Monday.

Chaffins said the case will be turned over to prosecutors to decide if anyone should be charged.

Talk of corruption, cronyism highlights pre-conclave meeting

By Nicole Winfield
Associated Press

VATICAN CITY — Cardinals said Monday they want to talk to Vatican managers about allegations of corruption and cronyism within the top levels of the Catholic Church before they elect the next pope, evidence that a scandal over leaked papal documents is setting up one of the most unpredictable papal elections in recent times.

The Vatican said 103 of the 115 voting-age cardinals attended Monday’s inaugural session of the pre-conclave meetings, at which cardinals organize the election process, discuss the problems of the church and get to know one another before voting.

The red-capped “princes” of the church took an oath of secrecy and decided to pen a letter of “greeting and gratitude” to Benedict XVI, whose resignation has thrown the church into turmoil amid a torrent of scandals inside and out of the Vatican.

“I would imagine that as we move along there will be questioning of cardinals involved in the governing of the Curia to see what they think has to be changed, and in that context anything can come up,” said U.S. Cardinal Francis George.

The Vatican’s administrative shortcomings were thrust into stark relief last year with the publication of documents stolen from Benedict XVI’s desk that exposed the petty infighting, turf battles and allegations of corruption, nepotism and cronyism in the highest echelons of the church.

The pope’s butler was convicted of stealing the papers and leaking them to a journalist; he eventually received a papal pardon.

No date has been set yet for the conclave and one may not be decided on officially for a few more days; the dean of the College of Cardinals has said a date won’t be finalized until all the cardinals have arrived.

Twelve more voting-age cardinals were en route to Rome; some had previously scheduled speaking engagements, others were due in later Monday or in the coming days, the Vatican said. Their absence, however, didn’t otherwise delay the conclave’s preparations.

Speculation has mounted that the conclave might begin around March 11, with the aim of having a new pope installed by March 17, the Sunday before Palm Sunday and the start of Holy Week.

Vehicle pursuit in Henderson leads to arrest

Gleaner staff

A Philpot man is in custody after a vehicle pursuit in Henderson County late Sunday night.

Timothy Oliver, 40, has been charged with first-degree fleeing/evading police (vehicle), second-degree fleeing/evading police (foot), driving on a suspended license for DUI (second offense) (aggravating circumstances), driving under the influence (aggravating circumstances), no insurance and several felony warrants, including a warrant from the Henderson Police Department for theft of an auto and two Daviess County warrants for failure to appear.

According to the Henderson County Sheriff's Office, Oliver fled from officers with the Henderson Police Department around 11:30 p.m. Sunday after they attempted to stop him for a traffic violation.

Sheriff's deputies located Oliver's vehicle in the 8000 section of U.S. 60-East, "traveling at a high rate of speed with one headlamp illuminated," according to a news release.

Oliver allegedly refused to stop for the sheriff's deputy, and a pursuit ensued.

The pursuit went from U.S. 60 to Kentucky 1078 and then onto Mount Ridge Road, where Oliver lost control of his vehicle, authorities said. After a foot pursuit, Oliver was taken into custody, according to a news release.

Panel awaiting House redistricting plan

The Associated Press

FRANKFORT — A proposal to redraw political lines between legislative districts may not get its first look by a House committee until Wednesday.

House Speaker Greg Stumbo said he expects the proposal to pass the full House this week.

Lawmakers will need to rush to get the matter resolved, considering eight days remain in the current legislative session.

Redistricting is supposed to occur every 10 years to account for population changes found by the U.S. Census Bureau.

Legislation that passed last year was struck down by the state Supreme Court. Justices found the new districts weren't balanced by population and didn't comply with the "one person, one vote" mandate in federal and state law.

Teen faces terroristic threatening charge

The Associated Press

VANCEBURG, Ky. — A northern Kentucky teenager has been charged with second-degree terroristic threatening after allegedly joking about bringing a large firecracker to his school in Lewis County, authorities said.

The boy was charged because had he brought the firework to school and ignited it, there would have been a panic and injuries could have occurred, authorities said.

Like it or not, drones coming to U.S. skies

Perhaps it’s a good thing we have made extensive, if controversial, use of drones in Afghanistan, Pakistan and Yemen because it has allowed us to build up substantial expertise in operating the pilotless aircraft. We’ll need that valuable experience at home because the Federal Aviation Administration has taken the first steps toward making drones a standard feature of the American skies — an estimated 10,000 in civilian use within five years, according to the FAA.

YOUR TURN

Do you have an opinion on these or other issues? Send your letters to Editor, The Gleaner, Box 4, Henderson, KY 42419 or email them to letters@thegleaner.com. Letters must be signed and include a phone number for verification.

The agency began soliciting proposals for six drone sites scattered around the country. Plans are to start small, with drones weighing less than around 55 pounds. Small drones are in limited use in the United States now for law enforcement, border surveillance and academic research. Industry experts told the Associated Press they anticipate a multibillion-dollar market for civilian drones once the FAA finishes drafting regulations to ensure that the drones are designed and operated so they don’t create a hazard for other aircraft and population centers.

The FAA, too, has drafted a privacy policy. Originally, the drones were developed for surveillance and intelligence purposes, functions in which they’ve been almost eerily successful.

The AP noted, “Privacy advocates worry that a proliferation of drones will lead to a ‘surveillance society’ in which the movements of Americans are routinely monitored, tracked, recorded and scrutinized by the authorities.”

It may not be too much of an exaggeration to say that the horse is already out of that barn. With a society as wired as ours, when seemingly no event goes unrecorded by camera phones, GPS units track your location and the social media generation seems indifferent to personal privacy, the drones — even misused — are only a modest addition to the growing capability for snooping. The problem for the FAA is to keep a wayward drone from crashing through your picture window rather than peering through it.

Obama’s ‘cure’ worse than disease

New Jersey’s Chris Christie has become the eighth Republican governor to agree to expand Medicaid coverage in his state under the provisions of the Affordable Care Act. Is the last line of Republican resistance to “Obamacare” disintegrating? In 2011, 26 states joined a lawsuit challenging the constitutionality of the Obamacare provision that would have forced them to expand Medicaid coverage as a condition of continued participation in the federal program.

The Supreme Court ruled in their favor last year, negating the mandatory requirement, so it is voluntary for states to expand Medicaid coverage. The Congressional Budget Office still estimates that expanded Medicaid coverage, though now voluntary rather than mandated on states, will contribute about a third of the reduction in the number of uninsured Americans brought about by Obamacare by 2022. So it was assumed, once expansion of Medicaid became voluntary, that this was a line Republican governors would not cross. Refusal of Republican governors to play ball could be a serious setback for Obamacare to advance and plant its institutional roots.

But one by one, Republican governors like Christie, and just before him Florida’s Rick Scott, are playing ball. Christie was graphically honest in describing the perverse dynamics. “... I am no fan of the Affordable Care Act. ... I think it is wrong for New Jersey and I think it is wrong for America. ... However, it is now the law of the land and I will make all my judgments as governor based on what I believe is best for New Jersey.” By expanding the qualifying conditions for Medicaid, Obamacare opens the door, according to the Congressional Budget Office’s latest estimate, to adding another 11 million people to the almost 68 million Americans already in the program.

The costs of those 68 million are paid for by a combination of state and federal funds. However, as incentive to bring in the additional 11 million, the federal government is paying 100 percent of the costs for the first three years. Christie and seven other Republican governors are agreeing to take the bait. And Christie says, clear as a bell, that he is doing so even though he knows he is strengthening a program that is bad for his country.

Assume that Christie’s assessment is correct. Multiply by 50, and we can have 50 states agreeing to take a bribe to strengthen and advance a program that will hurt the country. Medicaid violates basic management principles. One, there is no clear institutional responsibility. The program has grown through funding from both state and the federal government. Anyone who has ever run an organization knows that absence of clear responsibility produces bad results. Medicaid spending has grown from 0.5 percent of GDP in 1970 to 2.7 percent of GDP in 2010. According to Medicaid’s chief actuary, “From program inception, the cost of Medicaid has generally increased at a significantly faster pace than the U.S. economy.” And there is no individual responsibility. Medicaid is a pure welfare program. Participants have 100 percent of their costs covered by the government. And once you have qualified, there is no time limit. There are no incentives to behave and spend efficiently. The only direction of Medicaid is to spend more and more money less and less well. Delivering health care to low-income Americans is a real challenge. But to keep America great, we need to behave intelligently as well as compassionately. If we are going to subsidize health care for the poor, it should be through some kind of voucher to buy insurance — not through welfare. Meanwhile, the evil geniuses in Washington have devised a way to get even Republican governors to buy into a welfare program they know can only hurt our nation.

Kathy Brauer, Henderson KET programming well worth your support

I have been a volunteer at KET, Kentucky’s statewide public television system, since 2010. I volunteer my time there because for years my family and I have enjoyed the diverse, wonderful programming and services KET provides, and I want to take part in passing those things on to others in my community. KET produces programming that focuses on Kentucky and keeps us informed on public affairs, arts, health and education in the Commonwealth. From legislative coverage and weekly public affairs programs to “Kentucky Life,” “Louisville Life” and “Kentucky Collectibles” — nobody puts the emphasis on Kentucky that KET does. Plus, KET serves the community through its many outreach efforts and services to our schools. KET also delivers outstanding national programming, including “Antiques Roadshow,” “Masterpiece,” “Celtic Woman” and the many nonviolent, commercial-free children’s programs that parents know they can trust. For all of these reasons, I support KET and urge others to do the same. There is no better time to show your support than during KET’s TeleFund 2013, March 2-17. You’ll feel proud to be a supporter of KET, knowing that you’re helping to keep great programs and services on the air for all Kentuckians.

Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives — the agency assigned to bring the bad guys to ground but used as a whipping boy for pro-gun zealots — to accomplish the increased prosecutions he said were needed to clean up the streets? Hardly. No one should be surprised by this. Most Republicans rely heavily on a constituency that brooks no interference with the free flow of weapons, the only products of any kind protected by the Constitution no matter how dangerous to society. Not even a series of horrific blood-lettings can persuade them that an amendment written 226 years ago, in a nation mainly of wilderness, may have little relevance in a modern urban society of 315 million people. Mine was the last of the 20 or so questions he fielded at the breakfast. Well, Mr. Congressman, I said, how are you going to accomplish the crackdown on street crime when you and your Republican colleagues on both sides of Capitol Hill have neutered the one agency directly responsible for doing that? The ATF, I argued, hasn’t had a significant budget increase or a permanent director in nearly a decade. The agent force is at 2,000, and the inspection force is slim at best. (Actually, that group is so small, gun dealers rarely worry about inspections.) Furthermore, gun records can only be kept a short time and Congress even has forbidden the agency to computerize the information. They haven’t the money, I declared. “They have the wherewithal,” Goodlatte mumbled. “Well, I beg to differ,” I countered. And on that happy note, as the moderator said, the session ended before I could explain that as the father of a former ATF agent I had some personal understanding of the problems. It was over — and so, I fear, is much chance that something meaningful will come out of the national debate that declares to the rest of the world this country is willing to significantly memorialize the 20 children and six adults killed with a hail of bullets in their Connecticut grade school with action aimed at not letting it happen again and includes responsible gun control. Want to know how bad it is? The chairman of this strategic committee, which once gave us the RICO Act to prosecute organized crime, argued about what is an “assault weapon,” apparently not recognizing the rapid-fire, semi-automatic military AR-15 that killed all those kids as qualifying for the designation. Here are two suggestions for his Easter junkets: Go to Afghanistan and view an assault weapon in action. Then go to a gun show.

Baby dies day after parents in crash

■ Police seek hit-and-run driver in N.Y.

By Colleen Long and Verena Dobnik
Associated Press

NEW YORK — A close-knit ultra-Orthodox Jewish community in Brooklyn was plunged into a new round of mourning Monday by the death of a baby who was delivered by cesarean section after his parents were killed in a grisly hit-and-run crash a day earlier.

Police hunted for the suspected driver, identified as Julio Acevedo, saying he was barreling down a residential street in a BMW at 60 mph, or twice the speed limit, on Sunday morning when he collided with a car hired to take the couple to the hospital.

The death of the newborn on Monday piled tragedy upon tragedy and compounded the community's grief.

The baby was buried near the fresh graves of his parents, Nachman and Raizy Glauber, both 21, according to Isaac Abraham, a spokesman for the Hasidic Jewish community. About a thousand community members turned out for the young couple's funeral a day earlier.

Woman dies after nurse refuses to perform CPR

■ Company claims she was following policy

By Gosia Wozniacka and Garance Burke
Associated Press

BAKERSFIELD, Calif. — Police on Monday were investigating whether there was any criminal wrongdoing in the handling of a health emergency at an independent living facility where a woman died after a nurse refused to provide CPR.

An official at Glenwood Gardens, a sprawling, gated facility in Bakersfield, defended the nurse, saying she had followed policy in dealing with the 87-year-old woman who collapsed in a dining room.

A police dispatcher who fielded the 911 call was told the woman appeared to have a heart problem and was barely breathing.

Police immediately routed the call to a dispatcher, who pleaded with a nurse at the home to perform CPR. The nurse refused, saying one of the facility's policies prevented her from doing CPR, according to an audio recording of the call.

Michaela Beard, a spokeswoman for Bakersfield police, said she couldn't provide any further information because the investigation was ongoing.

An unidentified woman made the Feb. 26 call, and asked for paramedics to be sent to help the woman. Later, a woman who identified herself as a nurse got on the phone and told dispatcher Tracey Halvorson she was not permitted to do CPR on the woman.

Halvorson urged the nurse to start CPR, warning the consequences could be dire if no one tried to revive the woman.

"I understand if your boss is telling you, you can't do it," the dispatcher said. "But ... as a human being ... you know, is there anybody that's willing to help this lady and not let her die?"

"Not at this time," the nurse answered.

During the 7-minute, 16-second call, Halvorson assured the nurse that Glenwood couldn't be sued if anything went wrong in attempts to resuscitate the resident, saying the local emergency medical system "takes the liability for this call," the transcript states.

Later in the call, Halvorson asks, "Is there a gardener? Any staff, anyone who doesn't work for you? Anywhere? Can we flag someone down in the street and get them to help this lady? Can we flag a stranger down? I bet a stranger would help her."

Cannibalism images seen in officer's trial

NEW YORK — Prosecutors finished presenting evidence to a jury hearing the cannibalism conspiracy case against a New York police officer Monday after showing jurors a video of a screaming woman, made to appear as if cooking over an open flame, and other disturbing images from websites devoted to torturing and eating women.

The government rested a week after it began trying to prove that Officer Gilberto Valle tried to conspire with others on the Internet to kidnap, kill and cannibalize six women, including friends and his wife.

As soon as the government finished, defense lawyers asked the judge to acquit their client, saying prosecutors failed to present sufficient evidence to let a jury decide whether Valle planned to carry out a crime. A judge reserved decision.

Gangster immunity claim is rejected

BOSTON — Gangster James "Whitey" Bulger cannot present evidence to a jury about his claim that he was given immunity for future crimes, including murder, a federal judge ruled Monday, calling Bulger's contention that he had a license to kill "beyond the pale."

U.S. District Judge Richard Stearns found that an immunity agreement "cannot as a matter of public policy license future criminal conduct."

Defense begins in prostitution trial

ALFRED — Attorneys for an insurance agent accused of helping a Zumba instructor engage in prostitution attacked police motives and the lead investigator's inexperience Monday in a case that drew international attention to Kennebunk.

Police Chief Robert F. MacKenzie testified that he passed over the department's only detective, two lieutenants and four patrol sergeants in favor of having a patrol officer lead the investigation because he felt that she had the most time to devote to the case.

"This appeared to be a complex case and that it was going to take the full attention of an investigator. I did not want to tie up our detective," he said, explaining why he chose the patrol officer.

The defense called its first witnesses in the trial of Mark Strong Sr. on Monday after the prosecution rested.

Protesters, police overwhelm military

CAIRO — Clashes between protesters and the police in the restive Egyptian city of Port Said that entered their second day Monday have dragged in the military to a dramatic extent into the nation's turmoil.

At times in the violence, frictions have arisen between the police that were battling protesters and army forces that tried to break up the fighting. Troops in between the two sides were overwhelmed by police tear gas, one army colonel was wounded by live fire, and troops even opened fire over the heads of police, bringing cheers from protesters.

Three policemen and three civilians were killed in the fighting, and troops stood by as protesters torched a government complex Monday that contains the city's main police building.

Masaai line up to vote in a general election in Ilbissil, Kenya, on Monday. Five years after more than 1,000 people were killed in election-related violence, Kenyans began casting votes in the nationwide election, seen as the country's most important in its 50-year history.

Long wait in Kenya vote; 19 die in election turmoil

■ Huge turnout expected in spite of bloodshed

By Tom Odula and Jason Straziuso
Associated Press

MOMBASA, Kenya — Kenya's presidential election drew millions of eager voters who endured long lines to cast ballots Monday, but the vote was marred by violence that left 19 people dead, including four policemen hacked to death by machete-wielding separatists.

Officials urged voters not to be intimidated by the violence amid fears that the impending election results could spark another round of the ethnic-related bloodshed, in which more than 1,000 people died after the 2007 vote.

The election is the first presidential poll under a new constitution designed to prevent the ethnic violence of 2007-08. Enthusiastic voters formed long lines around the country, and election officials estimated turnout at 70 percent of 14 million registered voters.

The voting got off to a bloody start when a group of 200 separatists set a trap for police in the coastal city of Mombasa in the pre-dawn hours, Inspector General David Kimaiyo said. Four police were hacked to death with machetes, coast police boss Aggrey Adoli said.

The separatist group — the Mombasa Republican Council — had threatened election day attacks, and Kimaiyo said police were planning a raid "that will see the end of the MRC."

The MRC believes that Kenya's coast should be an independent country. Their cause, which is not defined by religion, is fueled by the belief that political leaders in Nairobi have taken the coast's land for themselves, impoverishing indigenous residents.

In addition to the attack in Mombasa, police blamed the MRC for three deadly attacks in nearby Kilifi. An Associated Press reporter visited a morgue and saw four dead young men wearing red bandannas — a sign of the MRC — who had been shot to death.

An AP tally of the violence found that four police and three MRC members died in Mombasa, while six government officials, four MRC members and two civilians died in the three attacks near the coastal city of Kilifi, all according to police and mortuary officials.

After the polls closed, gunshots and an explosion rang out in Garissa as gunmen stormed two polling stations, said Farah Maalim, deputy speaker of parliament. Security forces responded, and the gunmen fled.

Syrian soldiers killed in Iraq

■ Country's aid to Assad under scrutiny

By Adam Schreck and Qassim Abdul-Zahra
Associated Press

BAGHDAD — Dozens of Syrian soldiers who had crossed into Iraq for refuge were ambushed Monday with bombs, gunfire and rocket-propelled grenades in an attack that killed 48 of them and heightened concerns that the country could be drawn into Syria's civil war.

That the soldiers were on Iraqi soil raises questions about Baghdad's apparent willingness to quietly aid the embattled regime of Syrian President Bashar Assad.

The well-coordinated attack, which Iraqi officials blamed on al-Qaida's Iraq arm, also suggests possible coordination between the militant group and its ideological allies in Syria, who rank among the rebels' most potent fighters.

Iraqi officials said the Syrians had sought refuge through the Rabiya border crossing in northern Iraq during recent clashes with rebels and were being escorted home through a different crossing farther south when the ambush occurred. Their convoy was struck near Akashat, not far from the Syrian border.

Ali al-Moussawi, a spokesman for Iraq's prime minister, provided the death toll and said nine Iraqi soldiers were also killed.

Smart watches gain interest and popularity

Martha Mendoza
Associated Press

PALOALTO, Calif. — On a sunny day at a picnic table in Silicon Valley, Eric Migicovsky glanced down at his wristwatch. He wasn't checking the time, he was checking his email. Glancing up, he grinned. The message was from yet another journalist.

In this corner of a world obsessed with the latest tech gadget, Migicovsky is this week's hotshot as his start-up company rolls out its new, high-tech Pebble smart watches. The $150, postage stamp-sized computer on a band is tethered wirelessly to a wearer's Android or iPhone.

With hands truly free, wearers also can read texts, see who is calling them, scan Twitter or Facebook feeds and, yes, check the time, while digging in their garden, barbecuing a steak or — as he was doing when he conceived of the idea — riding a bike when his phone began to ring.

And that's just the first version. Apps are being developed that eventually could bring everything from Angry Birds to eBay bidding onto our wrists.

"I like it when I'm running," says Migicovsky, "I like it on the subway, on an airplane, anytime I want to see what's on my phone without pulling it out of my pocket."

Pebble, which began shipping in January, is not the first to make a play for the watch market, which dwindled when consumers added smartphones to their purses and pockets. But this little firm of 11 is the most popular in the smart-watch sector today, bubbling up amid rampant rumors that Apple has its own iWatch in the works.

Apple spokeswoman Natalie Harrison declined to comment, but it wasn't the first time she'd been asked. Apple has several patents for high-tech watches.

Tim Bajarin, a Creative Strategies analyst who's followed Apple for more than three decades, said he's been waiting for an iWatch ever since the company introduced a tiny Nano in 2010 and consumers began strapping them to their wrists.

"I do believe that Apple could potentially disrupt the watch market if they took their innovative design and tied it to their smartphones and ecosystems," he said. "We have no knowledge that they are doing this, but the area is ripe for innovation."

Meanwhile, Bajarin has one of the first 6,000 Pebbles shipped out so far, and he was gushing over it.

Eric Migicovsky, CEO of Pebble, displays his company's smart watch in Palo Alto, Calif., last month. This new watch not only tells time, but it also connects to smart phones more than 10 yards away.

"I love it," he said. "I have four or five people who message me consistently, mostly my wife. In the past, I was always being forced to look at the face of my smartphone to see who it was. Now, I just glance at my wrist."

The next step? He wants a "Dick Tracy watch" that he could verbally order around, instead of pushing buttons.

Even without Apple, Pebble already faces serious competition with a handful of other smart watches.

The Cookoo, selling for $130, has a battery that lasts a year, compared to Pebble's once-a-week charge. The Sony SmartWatch, at $129.98, has a touchscreen, Motorola's $149 MOTOACTV includes a heart-rate monitor and MetaWatch's $299 STRATA has a more feminine design.

These newly emerging devices are innovative, not only for what they do, but also for how they were funded.

Last April, after failing to convince venture capitalists to fund Pebble, Migicovsky pitched it on Kickstarter, a website where any Internet user can support a project. He asked for $100,000. He got $10.3 million before capping his request. Supporters who spent $115 were promised a watch, which means Pebble already has sold about 85,000 watches. Cookoo and STRATA also turned to Kickstarter for start-up funding.

Michael Gartenberg, research director for technology research firm Gartner Inc., warned all of these start-ups face major challenges.

"There's been a lot of failed efforts to create smart watches, and the key will be for vendors to understand the watch isn't just another digital device," he said. "Consumers wear watches for many reasons that have nothing to do with telling time, as evidenced by watch companies such as Rolex."

Gartenberg said so far, none of the smart watches are really designed for the mass market. "The real question is will Apple or Google get into this space?" he said, noting Microsoft tried some years ago with its failed SPOT watches.

Any new device, even a watch, also raises regulatory questions. Are they safe to use on airplanes? Could they interfere with other devices?

California Highway Patrol spokeswoman Erin Komatsubara said drivers are allowed to glance at a smart watch, but it's not recommended to try to read anything at all while driving.

"It's considered a distraction," she said. "Two eyes on the road, two hands on the wheel, that's what we really, really want."

Companies struggle to popularize mobile money

By Peter Svensson
Associated Press

BARCELONA, Spain — Mobile money may seem like a hot concept, but consumers aren't warming to it.

At the world's largest cellphone trade show, held last week in Barcelona, the 70,000 attendees were encouraged to use their cellphones — instead of their key cards — to get past the turnstiles at the door. But very few people took the chance to do that. The process of setting up the phone to act as a key card proved too much of a hassle.

It's a poor omen for an industry that's eager to have the cellphone replace both tickets and credit cards. Companies are building chips antennas into phones that let the gadgets interact with "tap to pay" terminals and other devices equipped with short-range sensors, such as subway turnstiles. But getting the technology to do something useful and convincing people to adopt it is a slow process.

To make a payment in a store with your cellphone, "you need a lot of things to align," said Reed Peterson, who heads the Near-Field Communications initiative for the GSM Association, a global trade group for the wireless industry. The phone needs to be properly equipped with NFC hardware and software; the store needs to have the proper equipment and training. The phone company needs to support the transaction, and banks and payment processors need to be in on it.

Some of these things have fallen into place,

Peterson said, but the network of commercial agreements that supports these payments needs to expand. And consumer demand remains elusive.

"I want to get to the point where the consumer goes into the store and says, 'Show me only the phones that have NFC,'" Peterson said.

Today, a buyer is quite likely to go into a store and ask for an iPhone, and that's an obstacle to NFC adoption. Apple Inc. is the lone holdout among major smartphone makers, and hasn't built NFC into any of its devices yet.

Visa, the global payments network, announced a coup at the show. It has struck a deal with Samsung Electronics to take charge of the "secure element" in the next flagship phone from the South Korean company. The Galaxy S IV is expected to be launched at an event in New York on March 14, though the name has not been confirmed.

The "secure element" is sort of like a safe inside the phone. Whoever controls access to it decides which credit cards, transit passes or other verified "documents" the phone can store.

WASHINGTON — It's a road trip that could test the best of marriages: Mars.

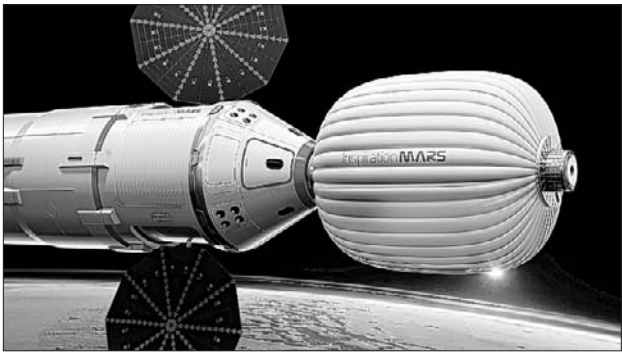

A tycoon announced plans last week to send a middle-aged couple on a privately built spaceship to slingshot around the red planet and come back home, hopefully with their bodies and marriage in one piece after 501 days of no-escape togetherness in a cramped capsule half the size of an RV.

Under the audacious but bare-bones plan, the spacecraft would blast off less than five years from now and pass within 100 miles of the Martian surface. The cost was not disclosed, but outsiders put it at more than $1 billion.

The team of space veterans behind the project hasn't quite figured out the technical details of the rocket they will use or the capsule the husband-and-wife astronauts will live in during the 16-month voyage. But they know it will be an adventure not for the weak of body or heart.

"This is not going to be an easy mission," chief technical officer and potential crew member Taber MacCallum said. "We called it the Lewis and Clark trip to Mars."

The trying

A drawing provided by Inspiration Mars shows an artist's concept of a spacecraft that would send married couple on a mission to fly by the red planet.

circumstances include: no showers, limits on toilet paper and clothing, drinking water made from the crew members' recycled urine and sweat, and almost no privacy. But the flight also comes with never-before-seen views of Mars. And there's ample time for zero-gravity sex in space, something NASA doesn't like to talk about.

As for why a man and a woman will be selected, "this is very symbolic and we really need it to represent humanity," MacCallum said.

He said if it is a man and a woman on such a long, close-quarters voyage, it makes sense for them to be married, so they can give each other the emotional support they probably will need when they look out the window and see Earth get smaller and more distant: "If that's not scary, I don't know what is."

The private, nonprofit project, called Inspiration Mars, will get initial money from NASA engineer-turned-multimillionaire investment consultant Dennis Tito, the first space tourist. The organizers hope to raise the rest through donations, advertising and media partnerships.

NASA, which has talked about sending astronauts to orbit Mars by the mid-2030s, will not be involved in this project.

Instead, its backers intend to use a ship built by other aerospace companies, employing an austere design that could take people to Mars for a fraction of what it would cost the space agency to do with robots, officials said.

Even though some of the hardware hasn't even been built, Tito said, he is confident everything will come together by 2018 with no test flights.

It will be a stripped-down mission when it comes to automation and complexity, meaning the couple will have to fix things on the fly like TV's MacGyver and do more piloting than on NASA vehicles, said chief medical officer Jonathan Clark.

The flight is timed to take advantage of the once-in-a-generation close approach of the two planets' orbits. The timeline calls for launch on Jan. 5, 2018, the Mars flyby on Aug. 20, 2018, and a return to Earth on May 21, 2019.

It involves huge risk, more than a government agency such as NASA would normally permit, officials concede. For example, the spaceship will fly during a period when galactic cosmic rays will be high because of the sunspot cycle. That will increase the crew's cancer risk by about 3 percent, which is more than on any NASA mission, Clark said.

The ship would also re-enter Earth's atmosphere at twice the speed of ordinary space capsules, something Tito said still needs to be worked out.

Push in place to halt workplace bullying

By Sam Hananel
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Margaret Fiester is no shrinking violet, but she says working for her former boss was a nightmare.

“One day I didn’t do something right and she actually laid her hands on me and got up in my face and started yelling, ‘Why did you do that?’” said Fiester, who worked as a legal assistant for an attorney.

Fiester doesn’t have to worry about those tirades anymore, but she hears lots of similar stories in her current role as operations manager at the Society for Human Resource Management, where she often fields questions about the growing issue of workplace bullying.

On-the-job bullying can take many forms, from a supervisor’s verbal abuse and threats to cruel comments or relentless teasing by a co-worker. And it could become the next major battleground in employment law as a growing number of states consider legislation that would let workers sue for harassment that causes physical or emotional harm.

“I believe this is the new claim that employers will deal with. This will replace sexual harassment,” said Sharon Parella, a management-side employment lawyer in New York. “People who oppose it say these laws will force people to be polite at work. But you can no longer go to work and act like a beast and get away with it.”

Many companies already recognize workplace bullying as a problem that can sap morale, lead to increased employee turnover and even affect the bottom line. Half the employers in a 2011 survey by the management association reported incidents of bullying in their workplace, and about a fourth of human resource professionals themselves said they had been bullied.

At St. Anthony North Hospital outside of Denver, human resources director Robert Archibold says most of the bullying incidents he sees are peer-to-peer. In a recent case, one worker got offended by a co-worker’s remark and suggested they “take it out to the parking lot.” The offending worker was suspended under the hospital’s anti-bullying policy, which has been in place for more than a decade.

“Hostile work environments, threats, bullying can come from anywhere,” he said. “You can’t tell by looking at someone who it will be.”

One reason the issue has attracted more attention in recent years is that parents who deal with school bullying realize it can happen in the workplace, too.

Some employers have put into place anti-bullying policies, but advocacy groups want to go even further. They have been urging states to give legal rights to workers who do not already fit into a protected class based on race, gender or national origin.

More than a dozen states — including New York and Massachusetts — have considered anti-bullying laws in the past year that would allow litigants to pursue lost wages, benefits and medical expenses and compel employers to prevent an “abusive work environment.”

Gary Namie, a social psychologist who co-founded the Bellingham, Wash.-based Workplace Bullying Institute in 1997, is among those leading the charge, along with labor unions and civil rights groups. He says the economic downturn has made bullying even worse and argues that passage of the laws would give employers more incentive to crack down on bad behavior in the workplace.

“People are trapped; they don’t have the same alternative jobs to jump to,” Namie said. “They are staying longer in these pressured, stress-filled, toxic work environments.”

Business groups have strongly opposed the measures, arguing they would open the floodgates to frivolous lawsuits.

“We would look at a bill like this as overreaching,” said Marc Freedman, executive director of labor law policy for the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. He said the bill would punish an employer for acts of its employees that it may not be able to anticipate.

But Parella, the employment lawyer, thinks it’s only a matter of time before states begin passing these laws and bullying issues become a major factor in workplace litigation.

In Massachusetts, the National Association of Government Employees Local 282 has been one of the first unions in the country to include an anti-bullying clause in collective bargaining agreements.

“From a labor perspective, we want there to be remedies in place for corrections to be made, not to yell, scream, threaten or treat the person basically like a slave,” said Greg Sorozan, president of NAGE, which represents about 12,000 public employees.

In 2008, Sorozan succeeded in placing “mutual respect” provisions in labor contracts with the state that say harassment, abusive language and bullying behavior will not be tolerated in the workplace. It allows workers to raise concerns with managers and file a grievance if not satisfied.

Sorozan said the provision recently helped workers in a state office who complained about a manager who acted bizarrely, leering at employees over cubicles and randomly punishing those who questioned him by reassigning them or refusing to let them take vacations. After the union complained, the manager was eventually forced out.

Addressing the issue

More than a third of U.S. workers have experienced workplace bullying, the repeated mistreatment by a boss or co-workers, which includes verbal abuse, threatening conduct, intimidation, harassment or social exclusion, according to the Workplace Bullying Institute. Targets of on-the-job bullying often suffer increased fear, anxiety, helplessness or anger.

Some other tips:

- Consult your company’s employee handbook to see if it has a policy prohibiting harassment or other workplace bullying behavior. Many organizations define acceptable standards of office behavior and have a process for filing complaints and punishing misconduct.
- Keep detailed notes of the bully’s actions, including the date, time and circumstances of what took place. The information is essential for filing an internal complaint or, possibly, a lawsuit.
- Talk to the person who has been bullying you. Sometimes, a boss or co-worker doesn’t realize words or actions have been hurtful. Talking it over in a professional way may resolve the problem. But don’t get caught in a war of words or make threats that could escalate the confrontation. Bring in a third party if talking privately makes you feel uncomfortable.
- If talking it over doesn’t help, it’s time to talk to the human resources department or the bully’s supervisor.
- Keep doing your job well to show managers that you are a valuable employee. Make it in the company’s interest to keep you happy.
- If you’ve worked through channels inside the office and there’s still no resolution, it may be time to part ways with your employer.

SMELTERS

The governor also condemned the legislation, which is being pushed by Century, saying it “further seeks a political solution to a business problem.”

Century and Alcan say Big Rivers’ power rates put them at a disadvantage while competing in the global aluminum market. A study commissioned last year by the Kentucky General Assembly cast doubt on whether the state could provide a long-term solution to that problem.

Last August, Century gave Big Rivers a 12-month notice of termination of power contract. Alcan followed suit on Jan. 31, meaning that in less than a year, Big Rivers faces the loss of its two biggest customers, which account for about 65 percent of its sales.

Big Rivers has filed a request to the Kentucky Public Service Commission for a $74.5 million annual rate increase, mostly to cover the cost of losing Century; it expects to request a second increase to cover the loss of Alcan. Combined, the two could cost rural electric customers and several remaining large industries a combined $110 million in extra power bills per year.

But to keep the smelters in operation, Big Rivers President and CEO Mark Bailey says his company has been willing to negotiate an arrangement allowing them to buy electricity on the open market from other power companies, provided the smelters agree to pay Big Rivers for any costs it incurs importing that power.

However, Century has pushed for legislation that would give a “large industrial consumer of electricity” such as a smelter the right under state law to buy power on the open market. Alcan has remained largely silent on the legislative push.

Big Rivers says it is concerned that the legislation could cause its remaining customers to be saddled with extra costs in addition to the proposed rate increases. Some amendments have been added to the bills that address such concerns. But Big Rivers insists such matters should be covered in a negotiated business agreement, not dictated by legislation.

Kentucky Association of Manufacturers President and CEO Greg Higdon said a bigger issuer looms: finding a way to prevent the aluminum smelters from leaving the Big Rivers’ electric system at all.

“In order to provide the power needed by all our manufacturers, utilities have had to incur major infrastructure costs and those costs are shared by all their customers,” Higdon said. “When we think about allowing a large user to go outside of that structure to purchase power, the additional costs of power system maintenance must be absorbed by other users in the area,” including remaining industries as well as rural homes, farms and small businesses.

Big Rivers says it offered the smelters $45 million in annual cost savings last year, but was turned down.

Kentucky Chamber President David Adkisson, meanwhile, said having the Kentucky

General Assembly intervene in the contractual affairs between a utility and its customers could set a bad precedent and send a negative signal to international bond markets. That could make it more difficult for Kentucky utility companies to borrow money to make improvements to their electric systems in the future, he said.

Kentucky’s historically low electric rates “have long been an economic development recruiting tool for new and expanding business in the state,” Adkisson said.

“With continued pressures on our utility industry for the cost of compliance with EPA mandates, the last thing our utility rate base needs is another unnecessary increase due to government policies creating regulatory uncertainty,” he said.

about their willingness to back anybody right, left, or center to get me out of their way.”

Defeating McConnell would be the Democrats’ biggest prize of the 2014 election.

His seat is one of 14 that Republicans are defending while Democrats try to hold onto 21, hoping to retain or add to their 55-45 edge.

The 71-year-old McConnell, first elected to the Senate in 1984, is a resilient politician with an unbroken string of victories and a reputation of pummeling opponents. He’s taking no chances even with an election more than a year away.

He has amassed a hefty bank account, with $7.4 million on hand of the $10 million he’s already raised, mostly from out-of-state donors. That’s a huge amount in Kentucky, where TV advertising rates are less expensive than elsewhere.

Given his leadership post and fundraising prowess, McConnell could double that as the election nears.

He spent more than $20 million in 2008 and won by just 6 percentage points over Louisville businessman Bruce Lunsford. This time, he’ll probably need as much as he can collect. Polls show that McConnell is widely unpopular in the state, and Democratic-leaning groups have started running ads against him.

To endear himself to voters, McConnell has promoted his efforts to protect jobs in Kentucky. In doing so, he has sent them a not-so-subtle message that his clout as Republican leader is reason enough to give him a sixth term.

Factory representatives have credited him with helping preserve some 3,000 Kentucky jobs last year alone. Many were in small sewing factories that were at risk of losing federal military contracts. A deal he brokered with Energy Secretary Steven Chu saved 1,200 jobs at the Paducah gaseous diffusion uranium enrichment plant.

The longest-serving senator in Kentucky history has presided over a GOP revival in the state over the past three decades. Republicans hold both Senate seats and five of the state’s six seats in the U.S. House. All were won with help from McConnell, who may not look the part of a political powerhouse but whose keen instincts have kept him at the top.

The chairman of Kentucky’s Democratic Party, Dan Logsdon, says McConnell’s longevity will be a critical issue. “He’s become a part of Washington, and Kentuckians all across our commonwealth have said it’s time to make a change,” Logsdon says.

McConnell counters: “I have no sense of entitlement about representing Kentucky. Kentuckians always choose the person who earns their support.”

As the face of the Republican establishment, McConnell saw his standing in the state threatened during the 2010 elections when his chosen candidate for a vacant Senate seat, then-Secretary of State Trey Grayson, lost to tea party-backed Rand Paul in a primary campaign that pitted the old guard in the GOP against a new band of insurgents.

McConnell’s answer to bridging those divisions and, perhaps, insulate himself from a primary challenge was to form strong tea party ties himself.

He quickly mended fences after Paul won the GOP nomination, and helped Paul raise money and develop strategy for the general election. The two have had a relationship of tolerance on Capitol Hill.

The tea party leader praised McConnell as a friend before hundreds of tea party activists last year on the Statehouse steps, and McConnell drew cheers. McConnell has recruited Paul’s former campaign manager, Jesse Benton, to lead his own re-election effort.

The moves signaled that potential tea party opponents should stand down even if they still disagree with McConnell.

He agitated tea party activists anew when he joined with Vice President Joe Biden late last year to work out a compromise on the “fiscal cliff,” which threatened automatic tax increases and spending cuts. One of those activists, David Adams of Nicholasville, said that deal “is just more smoke and mirrors from someone who has a decades-long track record of mostly smoke and mirrors.”

Despite grouching, Kentucky tea party groups have had little luck trying to recruit a strong primary challenger. At least two businessmen with tea party ties, John Kemper of Lexington and Matt Bevin of Louisville, are considering runs.

Beyond any primary, McConnell also is taunting would-be Democratic challengers in a comical online video intended to raise second thoughts about taking on a politician known as brawler. Never hugely popular with his constituents, McConnell has managed to win elections by making his opponents even more unpopular.

The video shows Judd, who has a home in the Nashville, Tenn., suburbs, saying “Tennessee is home” and that San Francisco is “my American city home.” It also shows some of Kentucky’s leading Democrats, including Lt. Gov. Jerry Abramson, U.S. Rep. John Yarmuth, Attorney General Jack Conway and Auditor Adam Edelen, saying they won’t run against McConnell.

Republican-leaning group American Crossroads is assailing Judd in its own online video that plays up the fact that she lives in Tennessee, and that she campaigned for President Barack Obama, who is unpopular in Kentucky.

Judd has been discussing the prospects of challenging McConnell with Democratic leaders, including Gov. Steve Beshear. Her interest has other Democrats sitting on the sidelines until she makes a decision. She has kept silent in the face of the early attack, as has the state Democratic Party.

McConnell said in a national broadcast interview Sunday that he expected “a spirited race. And of course there are a lot of left-wingers around the country who believe that the 2014 Senate race in Kentucky is the only race of national significance. And they would love to take out the Republican leader of the Senate. We’ll be ready for them.”

Asked specifically about Judd, McConnell said on CNN’s “State of the Union” that “we’ll see who they nominate and we’ll be happy to run against whomever is chosen.”

“The neat thing about the call center is that we can anticipate when the volume will rise and let the call center know so they can increase staffing,” said Emerson.

For example, during registration or when the financial aid deadline is approaching will likely spike the volume in calls for assistance, so the service center is already aware to add more staff during those times.

HCC has been working for more than a year to anticipate all the usual and unusual questions students might have and provide the answers to those questions in the database, Emerson said.

Defense lifts Henderson to title game

By Kevin Patton

PRINCETON, Ky. — Despite another poor shooting night, Henderson County returned to the Second Region championship game with a 62-41 victory over Madisonville on Monday.

The 25-2 Lady Colonels, who had their string of six straight regional titles stopped in 2010, will play for a spot in next week's Sweet 16 as they face University Heights (24-7) in tonight's championship game at 7 p.m.

"We want to win and get back to Diddle for our seniors," said sophomore Brea Cooper, who came off the bench for 11 points and five rebounds after seeing limited playing time for much of the season.

Cooper and freshman point guard Samantha Carter gave Henderson County surprising production on a night when the team shot just 36 percent from the field. Carter scored 14 of her career-high 17 points in the first half to keep the Lady Colonels in front even though the team made just 5-of-25 field goal attempts and committed 18 fouls.

"We missed some shots. We had layups we missed. We had shots around the basket we missed. We missed some jumpers. That kept them in the ballgame," Henderson County coach Jeff Haile said. "Samantha Carter kept us in the ballgame in the first half. She put the ball in the hole, drove to the basket and made some free throws."

Senior Ellie Fruit, who battled foul trouble for much of the game, scored six points in a 7-2 run by the Lady Colonels to start the second half and quickly push a 22-16 halftime lead to 29-18. Fruit, who was named the Second Region Coaches Association's player of the year following the game, had 11 points and had seven rebounds.

County.

"When we got the six point lead at halftime that was big for us. That got us a little bit of momentum and deflated them a little," Haile said.

Carter scored the last nine points of the half for the Lady Colonels, including a jumper from the baseline at the buzzer.

"Coach told me to push it up. I was doing what I could to help my team," Carter said.

In the second half, it was Cooper leading the charge with several run-out baskets off turnovers by Madisonville, which had 25 in the game.

Cooper, who is coming off knee surgery, was a two-year starter who has seen her playing time diminish this season.

"She has practiced well the last three or four weeks. The switch has turned on for her or she's feeling more comfortable with her knee," Haile said.

Despite hitting 9-of-13 attempts in the third quarter, Henderson County finished 18-of-50 from the field for the game. Madisonville, which was 1-of-8 in the first half, was 10-of-30 for the game.

"I haven't seen anybody shoot the ball well in this gym," Haile said. "We scouted three games here and I haven't seen anybody light it up. When you don't shoot the ball well, you've

Grubbs blazes in second half run

PRINCETON, Ky. — Leading Webster County by two points at halftime, the University Heights Academy Lady Blazers took control with a 16-2 blitz at the start of the third quarter and went on to a 60-44 in Monday's nightcap of the Second Region Tournament semifinals.

Why did the game turn so drastically? Lady Trojans coach Josh Steele offered a one-word answer: "Grubbs."

Held to two points in the first half, forward LeLe Grubbs scored 10 points in the decisive run.

She punctuated things with her second 3-point bomb, giving UHA a 39-23 lead with 4:20 left in the third period.

"I don't know how many (points) she had but she had a bunch on us," Steele said.

Grubbs never scored again after practically putting the game away and finished with 12.

But she packed those points into the most important stretch of the contest while Webster defenders focused on star point guard Denayia Holmes and 6-foot-6 center Mea Starling.

Monday night. Holmes scored a team-high 16.

Holmes picked up her third foul with 6:06 left in the first half and went to the bench with Webster ahead 17-15. Her team prospered without her and took the lead.

"You just ask everybody to group up and do a little bit more," UHA coach Taylor Sparks said.

Starling finished with 12 points, eight rebounds and five blocks. Also coming up huge was 6-foot forward Cache Richardson, who muscled her way to 13 rebounds.

With so much firepower, Sparks was confident that his team would eventually get rolling. He didn't have to deliver an inspiring halftime speech.

"We have a motto: We just do what we do," he said. "We don't do a lot of changing things. We know a run will happen in the course of the game."

Webster County went on a mini-run of its own in the fourth quarter, scrambling to a 10-3 streak that cut the deficit to nine. But that was as close as it would get.

Darian McNary led the Lady Trojans with a game-high 21 points.

Showcasing her open-court athleticism, she scored mostly on drives and putbacks. No other Webster girl had more than six points.

Head coach Parker McCalister, who was named the Second Region's coach of year before the game, missed the game because of illness. "He has bronchitis, flu and pneumonia," Steele said. "... Our principal actually told him to stay home. He was going to come in with a mask."

Making its first appearance in the regional finals in school history, University Heights (24-7) faces Henderson County in the championship game tonight at 7 p.m.

Cincinnati worn out by No. 8 Louisville

By Gary Graves
Associated Press

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Rick Pitino was noticeably hoarse in acknowledging his 300th victory with Louisville on Monday night, no doubt caused by all his yelling at the eighth-ranked Cardinals to carry out the cornerstone defensive strategy that has made him successful.

Judging from Louisville's second-nature execution in a 67-51 defeat of Cincinnati, Pitino probably could have saved his voice. The Cardinals forced the Bearcats into a season-high 21 turnovers, several coming during a 25-7 run over a 10:03 stretch in the second half.

A game once tied at 37 was soon a 62-44 Louisville lead that culminated in the Cardinals' sixth straight win and a postgame video tribute to Pitino.

"The biggest question I got tonight from the media was coming off such an emotional game, could you be on top of it?" said Pitino, referring to the carry-over from Saturday's 58-53 victory at Syracuse.

"I said, 'Without question.' It's been the M.O. of this team all year. They haven't let down one time. We've lost, but we've brought it every game. That was a very good defensive performance."

Louisville (25-5, 13-4 Big East) drew within one-half game of first-place Georgetown, which plays at Villanova on Wednesday. Besides forcing turnovers, the Cardinals held Cincinnati to 7-of-24 shooting (29 percent) in the second half and 18 of 51 overall (35 percent).

Missing all seven 3-point attempts after hitting 6 of 14 in the first half was also frustrating for the Bearcats, though not as much as their errors.

"We had no chance to win because we turned the ball over 21 times," said Cincinnati coach Mick Cronin, a Cardinals assistant in 2002 and 2003.

Louisville converted Cincinnati's mistakes into 23 points, keying an offensive effort in which the Cardinals outscored the Bearcats 42-16 in the paint.

Russ Smith scored 18 points and Peyton Siva and Gorgui Dieng added 11 each for Louisville, which shot 48 percent (28 of 58) including 13 of 24 in the second half.

"This is like Louisville every year," Siva said. "Coach P gets us going like this every year. All that hard work is finally paying off."

Cashmere Wright scored 15 points and Sean Kilpatrick and JaQuan Parker had 12 each for the Bearcats, who lost for the sixth time in eight games. Cincinnati lost their second straight to Louisville, which beat the Bearcats in last year's Big East tournament's championship game en route to a Final Four berth.

Gonzaga is No. 1 in AP Top 25 for 1st time

Wire reports

The to-do list for the Gonzaga basketball team got shorter Monday: For the first time, the Zags were ranked No. 1 in The Associated Press Top 25 poll.

Sweet, but it may get bumpier from there.

Next: Avoiding the pot-holes that have stopped every other No. 1 this season, then finding a way to the Final Four.

“We don’t believe there is any jinx,” assistant coach Tommy Lloyd said, subbing for coach Mark Few, who was said to be fly fishing and unavailable for comment. “Obviously, it’s a dream for us, the ultimate accomplishment.”

Staying No. 1 has been tough this season, with Gonzaga the fifth school to hold the spot after replacing Indiana this week. The others were Duke, Louisville and Michigan.

Gonzaga, a small Jesuit school in Spokane, is where crooner Bing Crosby went and where John Stockton threaded pinpoint passes. It has the best record in Division I at 29-2 following week-end wins against BYU and Portland. The Hoosiers, beaten by Minnesota last week, dropped to No. 2.

“We’re not necessarily in pursuit of a ranking,” Lloyd said. “We’re trying to get to the NCAA tournament. When that’s over, as coaches we can look back and realize what an accomplishment it is and how difficult it is.”

Gonzaga’s bench celebrates on the way to a win Saturday over Portland. On Monday, an updated Associated Press poll listed Gonzaga as the No. 1 team in college basketball.

The Zags are the 57th school to be ranked No. 1 since the AP poll began in January 1949. The school is considered a mid-major and reached No. 2 for the first time last week. Now it will play for the first time at No. 1 on Saturday night in the West Coast Conference semifinals.

The school received 51 first-place votes from the 65-member national media panel, 44 more than Indiana. Duke, winners over Miami after a loss to Virginia, remained third with five first-place votes.

Kansas and Georgetown both jumped two spots to fourth and fifth. The Hoyas received the other two first-place votes. Miami, Michigan, Louisville, Kansas State and Michigan State rounded out the top 10. Virginia Commonwealth and UCLA, both ranked earlier in the season, returned to the poll at 21st and 23rd, respectively.

Gonzaga’s rise to the top comes 14 years after the school burst onto the national scene with a surprise run to the final eight of the NCAA tournament. Since then, Few has guided the Zags to 12 conference titles, 13 trips to the tournament and four trips to the round of 16.

Kelly Olynyk, the 7-foot

Canadian center, leads the team in scoring at nearly 18 points a game and averages seven rebounds. He calls the No. 1 ranking a “great milestone.”

“We have a special team this year,” he said. “It shows that college basketball in the rest of the country has a lot of respect for us.”

It hasn’t been easy. Every year, the Zags seem to take on a tougher nonconference schedule to make up for their WCC schedule. This year they own wins over No. 9 Kansas State, No. 13 Oklahoma State, plus Clemson, Oklahoma, Baylor, Washington State and West Virginia. Their only losses are to Illinois and Butler.

“We’ve had our struggles and battles, but we’ve made the right adjustments and calls,” Lloyd said. “We must be doing something right.”

■ No. 4 Kansas 79, Texas Tech, 42: Jeff Withey scored 22 points and every senior had a big night at their last home game, leading Kansas past Texas Tech at Allen Fieldhouse.

WOMEN

■ No. 24 Syracuse 68, No. 13 Louisville, 57: Freshman Brittney Sykes and senior Kayla Alexander each scored 16 points and Syracuse beat Louisville. The victory gave the Orange the third seed and a double-bye for the Big East tournament.

Baltimore Ravens quarterback Joe Flacco is lifted into the air by teammates after defeating the San Francisco 49ers 34-31 in Super Bowl XLVII in February. Flacco has led the Ravens into the playoffs in each of his five seasons and the team has lifted him to be the highest-paid player in the NFL: $120 million over six years, with a $29 million signing bonus.

Ravens’ QB Joe Flacco signs NFL’s richest contract, for now

By David Ginsburg
Associated Press

OWINGS MILLS, Md. — Joe Flacco knows his stature as the highest-paid player in NFL history may not last for long, and he’s OK with it.

What matters most to the Super Bowl MVP is that the Baltimore Ravens were willing to pay him that kind of money in the first place.

Flacco signed his new contract Monday worth $120.6 million over six years. He will receive a $29 million signing bonus, $52 million in guaranteed money and $51 million over the deals’s first two years.

The former first-round draft pick out of Delaware is the first starting quarterback in NFL history to make the playoffs in each of his first five seasons. He’s led the Ravens to nine wins over that span, tying Tom Brady for most among quarterbacks in the first five years of a career.

Flacco threw 11 touchdown passes and no interceptions during the recent postseason and led Baltimore to a 34-31 Super Bowl win over San Francisco.

And it all made the Ravens willing to pay him more money than Aaron Rodgers, Peyton Manning, Drew Brees or any other of the great quarterbacks in the game today.

“When guys that are drafted in the first round, when guys that win football games for you, quarterbacks like that, when the time comes up for those guys to get paid, they usually become the highest-paid guy in the league,” Flacco said. “I’m sure in a couple of months from now, someone is going to sign a deal, and you guys are going to be talking to them about how they are the highest-paid guy in NFL history. That’s just the name of the game.”

“I know that this isn’t going to hold up for that long, but that’s not a priority of mine to be the highest-paid guy. The priority of mine was to get that respect that I felt, that I feel now from this organization.”

Flacco is the quarterback the Ravens have longed to have for years, and they weren’t about to let him get away.

“We just returned from the (scouting) combine, and I remember the days of going there and studying and hoping that one of the quarterbacks could be our guy. ... We’ve been out in that desert before,” Ravens general manager Ozzie Newsome said. “That all changed when we drafted Joe in 2008, and now we’ve secured him for many more years. He’s a significant reason we’ve been to the playoffs five years in a row, played in three AFC championship games, and now, we are Super Bowl champs with Joe as MVP.”

Flacco’s performance this past offseason almost certainly helped him receive his record-breaking contract. But the quarterback thought he was good enough to receive all that money before he threw three touchdown passes against the 49ers.

“Listen, winning the Super Bowl, winning the Super Bowl MVP doesn’t make me as valuable as I am,” he said. “I think I bring to the table what I bring to the table. I think I’m an asset to this team, and I’m worth what I’m worth. The fact that we won the Super Bowl just comes with that. If we didn’t win the Super Bowl this year, I still think I’m worth the same, and I still think I’m the same person to this organization. It may not be seen that way, but that’s the bottom line. I still think I give the team the best chance to win moving forward.”

Flacco turned down a contract before the 2012 season that would have paid him roughly $15 million a year.

“The real risk is that I could get hurt,” he said. “... I didn’t know if we were going to go win the Super Bowl and all of that, so that kind of helped the situation out, I think, a little bit.”

Hingis leads tennis Hall of Fame class

Five-time Grand Slam singles champion Martina Hingis leads the 2013 class for the International Tennis Hall of Fame.

The other new members of the Hall announced Monday are Cliff Drysdale, Charlie Pasarell and Ion Tiriac. Australian player Thelma Coyne Long’s election was announced earlier.

Hingis won 15 major titles, the first at Wimbledon in women’s doubles when she 15 years, 9 months old, making her the youngest Grand Slam champion in tennis history.

The Swiss star also was the youngest woman to reach No. 1 in the WTA singles rankings, getting there in March 1997 at 16½, and spent a total of 209 weeks in the top spot. Hingis spent 35 weeks at No. 1 in doubles, too.

Summitt writes of Alzheimer’s battle

Pat Summitt has trouble remembering records, scores and statistics from her 38-year career, but the former Tennessee women’s basketball coach says she still recalls all her former players.

Summitt details her battle with early-onset dementia, Alzheimer’s type, in her memoir “Sum It Up,” which she wrote with Sally Jenkins. The book was to be released today.

Summitt, 60, stepped down as Tennessee’s coach last April after winning eight national titles and 1,098 games, giving her the most career victories of any Division I men’s or women’s basketball coach in history.

Video of the shot became an immediate sensation online. Duke guard Seth Curry tweeted “Wow!” to go along with a YouTube link for Edney’s heave, and New Rochelle alum Ray Rice of the Baltimore Ravens also offered his congratulations online.

B10 trial balloon: Count fall baseball

The Big Ten is measuring support for a proposal that would give college baseball teams the option of playing non-conference games in the fall that would count in determining the NCAA’s tournament field the following spring.

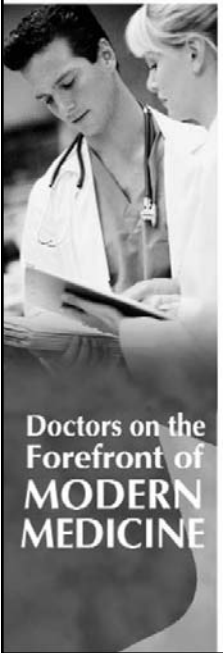

Big Ten coaches have voted to continue studying the idea proposed by Purdue’s Doug Schreiber. Deputy commissioner Brad Traviolia said Monday the conference is in the process of explaining the concept to coaches across the country.

Traviolia said if the idea gains traction, the Big Ten would enter the proposal in the NCAA legislative process. He said he couldn’t predict when that would happen, if ever.

The Big Ten and other northern conferences for years have sought ways for their schools to gain greater access to the NCAA tournament.

Do you suffer from Asthma?

Doctors on the Forefront of MODERN MEDICINE

Asthma is a chronic disease that causes swelling and inflammation in the airways that lead to your lungs. When asthma flares up, the airways tighten and become narrower which keeps the air from passing through easily and makes it hard to breathe. The swelling and inflammation in the airways can lead to permanent changes in the airways and harm the lungs. Symptoms of asthma may include, wheezing, coughing and chest tightness.

If you or someone you know suffers from asthma, you may qualify to participate in a national clinical research study conducted by the allergy department at Deaconess Clinic. Participation includes all study-related exams and study medication at no cost, as well as compensation for time and travel. You must be age 18 to 65 to qualify.

Old timer lived long enough so far to see — most things

A grizzled septuagenarian basketball fan looked out over his coffee cup the other day and said, “Y’know, I’ve lived long enough to have seen just about everything,”

Maybe. Maybe not.

Dateline: Pyongyang. When an ex-basketball flake with barbed wire hanging from his lips and nose makes himself USA’s ambassador to North Korea, my 75-year-old pal has plenty of new stuff to look forward to.

Dennis Rodman told the world last week that dictator Kim Jong Un “is an awesome kid” who loves basketball as much as Barack Obama. And, he said, Jong Un wants a phone call from the president to make everything all right.

Think of it, Obama out back of the White House, posting up his man.

Meanwhile, what a pair for diplomacy, Dennis Rodman and a fan with his finger on a nuclear button.

But let us be optimistic. Our world could be saved by a phone call request channeled by nose-ring cross-dresser who hangs out with the Globetrotters. Then, who knows, we could witness nomination for a Nobel Prize for Peace ... Dennis Rodman.

No, my 75-year-old friend has not seen everything. Better hang around awhile.

America. I love this place!

KENTUCKY

With the Kentucky Wildcats having played themselves back onto the ledge of the NCAA tournament at Arkansas, a few things seem obvious.

First, the bull rush play at Fayetteville brought to mind ...

Rick Pitino style.

■ Rush tempo early, get crowd involved, influence game officials who often cannot resist being swept up in crowd-pleasing on 50-50 calls.

■ Test officials early, find level of rough play allowed.

Coach Mike Anderson added to the frenzy by substituting in waves.

Result? The Wildcats rushed, were rattled, got tired and let themselves be bullied.

Which brings us to ...

LEAVIN’ & STAYIN’

Kentucky’s Alex Poythress and Archie Goodwin.

This month and next fans will watch for ...

■ Hints on which coaches want to return next season or not.

■ Signs for which players and families are listening to (advisers/agents).

■ Alex Poythress. On his bone-jarring/in your face test on the road, he failed.

Poythress’s lackluster body language indicates he’s ready to be paid-to-play. Reality: Sit on an NBA bench, be a spot player; Or, like Terrence Jones, play in the development league.

■ Archie Goodwin. Instincts and style, unless Goodwin changes dramatically, the coach-speak hints are there is no place for him at Kentucky next season.

He is a one-on-everybody player whose style is better suited to the NBA though he is clearly not physically ready and certainly not mature enough.

Bottom line. With Calipari’s recruiting class for next season, playing time for Poythress and Goodwin as they are today, projects to go down, not up.

SELECTION SUNDAY

Days until college basketball’s biggest holiday, Selection Sunday, is almost into single digits and what do we have? Precisely what fans want: No clear-cut favorite to the Final Four, and No. 1 seeds still up for grabs.

Heading to league tournaments, who’s playing best? Gonzaga (West), Duke (Southeast), Georgetown (East) and Louisville (Mideast).

‘NEW’ BIG EAST

With the so-called Catholic 7 as its core, college basketball’s newest hot item is the NEW Big East: DePaul, Georgetown, Marquette, Providence, St. John’s, Seton Hall and Villanova will be joined by Butler, Xavier, St. Louis, Dayton and Creighton.

Lots to like about this new league.

Little wonder television (FOX) is clamoring for a contract. Market reach begins with the Big East tournament staying at Madison Square Garden and stretching into ratings-rich cities, Philadelphia, Cincinnati on to Chicago and St. Louis on to Omaha, Neb.

Impact in Kentucky? None, right? Wrong. Louisville’s Yum Center will sell out for future Cardinal opponents Duke, North Carolina and other ACC teams, and Charlie Strong’s football program will be a force, basketball series with more geographically compatible rivals won’t happen.

WESTERN KENTUCKY

Conference realignments further afield, Western Kentucky would have been a better geographic fit in Conference USA than Florida Atlantic. FAU and Middle Tennessee left the Sun Belt for C-USA. Should have been Middle and Western.

With Eastern Kentucky long since in its rearview mirror, WKU athletics lose rival Middle Tennessee also.

A Hilltopper all-sports presence in C-USA would be a natural alongside Southern Miss, Marshall and Memphis, with good exposure into media markets Houston, New Orleans (Tulane) on to Tulsa.

View here is, Western Kentucky, like Middle Tennessee, has outgrown the Sun Belt.

UK-WKU PERFECT STORM

And, in a perfect storm kind of way, the Kentucky-Western Kentucky football opener Aug. 31 is already starting to draw a day-to-day countdown.

Hilltoppers fans, still aglow from beating UK in Lexington last year, are anxious to get the Wildcats in neutral Nashville this year.

New coach Bobby Petrino, a bevy of returnees and large recruiting class, adds to expectations.

Meanwhile, Kentucky

fans are revving up also, with new coaches, a well-regarded recruiting class and must-win-this-one motivation.

For Kentucky after WKU, the Wildcats move on to play consecutively: Louisville, Florida, at South Carolina, Alabama and at Mississippi State.

Footnote: Unofficially, more than 27,000 tickets have been allotted already for Kentucky’s spring game April 13.

PARTING SHOT

As Syracuse continues to spiral downward, the coach’s patience with media did likewise. Following another loss, Jim Boeheim at a postgame news conference was asked why a certain player was on the bench at a crucial time. He blew off the question and replied, “Any more coaches here? Want to ask another coaching question? I’d be happy to take it. I’ve only been doing this 37 years, I’m sure you’ve got more ideas of who we should play or we shouldn’t play or who should lead? What do I know?”

It’s March after all, a trip on road to the Final Four some coaches won’t be making.

And so it goes.

Nicklaus: Tiger ‘better get with it’ on majors tally

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

PALM BEACH GARDENS, Fla. — Tiger Woods was long gone from PGA National when Jack Nicklaus settled into his seat in the NBC Sports tower.

Woods’ week at the Honda Classic included two lost balls, four shots in the water and 15 shots out of the bunkers. He made four double bogeys, was never better than 3-under par at any point and was under par for only 26 out of the 72 holes he played.

None of this was enough to alarm Nicklaus.

In what now sounds like a broken record, Nicklaus maintains that records are made to be broken, including his gold standard of 18 professional majors.

“I still think he’ll break my record,” Nicklaus said Sunday. “Tiger’s talent, at 37 ... it’s not that old. I won four after that. They were spread out. It wasn’t that difficult. I don’t think for Tiger to get four or five more — or six or seven — is that big a stretch.”

Woods, of course, has been stuck on 14 since winning the U.S. Open in a playoff at Torrey Pines in 2008. Perhaps of more interest than his 0-for-14 streak since then is that he has not seriously contended in any of the majors since giving up a two-shot lead to Y.E. Yang at the 2009 PGA Championship. Sure, he was tied for the lead at the turn at the Masters two years ago. He was in the penultimate group at Pebble Beach in the 2010 U.S. Open, as he was at Royal Lytham & St. Annes last summer.

CHRIS O'MEARA / ASSOCIATED PRESS FILES

Jack Nicklaus waves in April 2011, before the first round of the Masters golf tournament in Augusta, Ga. Nicklaus still thinks Tiger Woods will break his record in the majors.

But when was the last time Woods had a realistic chance late in a major?

Even during his previous two droughts in the majors (both 0-for-10) he had serious chances to win at Royal Birkdale in 1998 and Pinehurst in 1999, and then at Hazeltine in 2002 and Royal St. George’s in 2003.

The Masters starts in 38 days, and Woods will be among the top two favorites to win a fifth green jacket, as he should be.

It’s foolish to suggest 37 is old, even on a left knee that has gone through as many surgeries as Woods has won green jackets. Nonetheless, with age, time seems to go faster.

“I still think he can do it,” Nicklaus said. “But that said, he has still got to do it. He hasn’t won one in five years. He had better get with it if he’s going to.”

Even after the road to 18 majors went over a cliff at the end of 2009 — and it took Woods two years to recover from the public embarrassment of his infidelities, his injuries and yet another coaching change — Nicklaus stayed consistent in the belief that his own record will fall.

■ “If Tiger is going to pass my record, this is a big year for him in that regard,” Nicklaus said at the start of the 2010 season, alluding to a major rotation that included Pebble Beach and St. Andrews.

■ “I’m surprised that he has not bounced back by now,” Nicklaus said in March 2011. “He’s got such a great work ethic. He’s so determined to do what he wants to do. I’m very surprised that he has not popped back. I still think he’ll break my record.”

Nicklaus never went through a major championship drought this severe, except for the 20 majors he played between the 1980 PGA Championship at Oak Hill and his 18th and final major at the 1986 Masters when he was 46.

It’s too early to make a conclusion about Woods’ 2013 season.

One week at the Honda Classic is not much of a barometer, nor is one day at Dove Mountain for the Match Play Championship.

When Nicklaus was at about the same stage in his career, it was not unusual for him to miss the cut or have a bad week. But his results were never this up and down. At age 37, the Golden Bear had 14 straight finishes in the top 10 on the PGA Tour.

About the only consistency in Woods is found in his answers.

“It’s not that far off,” Woods said when asked to compare his game at the Honda Classic with Torrey Pines. “I feel like I’m probably just not quite driving it as well. My iron game is pretty good and my short game is way better than it was at Torrey. I feel very comfortable with my putting, so I need to obviously get it in play a little bit more and attack from there, because everything else is pretty good.”

No doubt he wants to win every time he plays, but perhaps his performance at regular events takes on less significance to him, as long as his game is sharp and he peaks for the majors.

And that can’t be measured for another 38 days.

Vyjack ready for a big victory; Derby favorite list may change

By Richard Rosenblatt
Associated Press

Life is good for the owner of the latest 3-year-old to race onto the Kentucky Derby scene.

David Wilkenfeld bought Vyjack for $100,000 last year, became a first-time dad five months ago, purchased a Manhattan penthouse with an asking price of $16.5 million, and now has a chance to win America’s greatest horse race on May 4.

“It’s an amazing feeling, an amazing ride,” Wilkenfeld said Monday, two days after Vyjack improved to 4-for-4 by rallying to win the Gotham Stakes at Aqueduct.

“I’m enjoying every minute of this because nothing is taken for granted in this sport. Any day, anything can happen so I’m trying to be humble and enjoy it with family and friends.”

Vyjack, named for Wilkenfeld’s parents Vivienne and Jack, moved into the No. 6 spot in the AP’s latest Run to the Roses list of Top 10 Derby contenders.

Shanghai Bobby remained No. 1 as he continues to train for the Florida Derby on March 30 in his final prep before heading to Churchill Downs.

Other than Vyjack moving in and Overanalyze moving out after a fifth-place finish in the Gotham, there were no other significant changes.

Vyjack, a gelding, is just the second horse Wilkenfeld purchased on his own, the other was a $5,000 claimer in 2001.

In 2008, he was the single winner of a $3.3 million Pick Six bet at Santa Anita, correcting picking the winners in six consecutive races.

In 2003, he warmed up for that hit by teaming with friends to share a $1.3 million Pick Six ticket at Churchill Downs. Of course, the name he picked for his stable is ... Pick Six.

Wilkenfeld, a New Yorker, is the president of PromGirl.com, the largest online seller of special occasion dresses. Even though prom dress season runs this month and next, it’s easy to see how Wilkenfeld could get side-tracked by Derby season.

“Each time he wins, it’s a little more exciting than before,” he said. “Let’s hope he can keep it going.”

The Top 10 could undergo major changes after this weekend’s preps, the Tampa Bay Derby and the San Felipe at Santa Anita.

Buffett says stick with stock investments

By Joshua Freed
Associated Press

Warren Buffett says stocks are a good investment, long-term government bonds are a dumb one, and ketchup is forever.

The billionaire investor covered a range of topics in a CNBC interview Monday, including his purchase of Heinz, the sequester's "meat ax" approach to automatic budget cuts and what's going to happen when the Federal Reserve stops pumping money into the economy.

CHEAP MONEY BOOSTS STOCKS

Buffett has long been bullish on stocks, and still is. But they're likely to be hurt when interest rates rise, he said.

Cheap loans make it easy to get money to invest. And low returns on bank savings make stocks more attractive. He predicted those low interest rates won't go on forever.

Warren Buffett

"If interest rates go up dramatically, all assets will go down in value," he said.

THE DUMBEST INVESTMENT

Buffett says he'd still rather own stocks than other options such as farmland, junk bonds, real estate trusts, or long-term government bonds.

"They're not as cheap as they were four years ago" during the financial crisis and stock market sell-off, he said in an interview on CNBC on Monday. "But you get more for your money" compared to other investments.

He called long-term government bonds "the dumbest investment." Interest rates are much lower than usual. If they rise, bond investors could see the price of their bonds drop. That's because bond prices fall when interest rates rise.

BIG SHIFT AHEAD

Buffett said money managers will be selling some investments when the Fed stops pumping extra money into the economy. He says it will be a "very interesting day" when it becomes clear the Fed has reversed direction.

"We've never had the degree of disorgement that might be called for down the line, and who knows how it will play out. It will be noticeable," he said.

Buffett said that in 50 years of deciding whether to buy companies, he has never taken long-term economic worries into account. That includes his recent deal to buy Heinz. Last month he agreed to work with 3G Capital to buy the H.J. Heinz Co. for $23.3 billion.

"Charlie and I will talk about the business, we will not get into discussions about the Fed or whatever," he said, referring to Charles Munger, Berkshire's vice chairman. Buffett noted that he bought his first stock in 1942 during World War II, when the U.S. was losing the war in the Pacific.

Buying a company cheaply enough means that future economic shocks won't wreck a deal. He predicted that Berkshire Hathaway will own Heinz 100 years from now. "Heinz is forever, as far as we're concerned," he said.

AUTOMATIC SPENDING CUTS

Buffett said the automatic spending cuts that went into effect over the weekend are a "meat-ax way" to cut spending. But considering all the government spending and Federal Reserve cash infusions, spending probably has to be cut one way or another. "You may have to use the meat ax first," he said, "and then people kind of look at their handiwork and say, 'We have to do better than this.'"

NEWSPAPERS

Buffett's company has been buying papers. Berkshire Hathaway will own 28 daily newspapers in small and mid-sized cities once its acquisition of the Tulsa World is complete.

And there are more to buy. Last month Tribune Co. said it has hired investment bankers to help it sell its newspapers, which include the Chicago Tribune and the Los Angeles Times.

"No thanks," Buffett said when asked about buying those two papers.

He said the papers that are going to make money will be those in a tight-knit community that wants local news.

oil imported by U.S. refineries, fell 31 cents to $110.09 a barrel in London.

Investors had two main concerns Monday. The U.S. government is set to spend less money. Spending cuts of roughly $85 billion automatically kicked in on Friday after President Barack Obama and Congress failed to reach a compromise on some parts of the budget.

Also, the government of China, which has fueled the world economy even when other countries have stumbled, introduced new measures to try to rein in home prices.

The exception in energy commodities was natural gas, which gained 7 cents to $3.53 per 1,000 cubic feet.

Other energy commodities fell. Wholesale gasoline fell 1 cent to $3.10 a gallon. Heating oil slipped 1 cent to $2.92 a gallon.

Gold, silver and copper were virtually flat. Gold for April delivery rose 10 cents to $1,572.40 per ounce. May silver edged up less than 1 cent to $28.496 per ounce. May copper inched up less than 1 cent to $3.5015 per pound.

Wheat prices fell for the first day in five after the weather improved in growing regions of the Great Plains. Brandon Marshall, an analyst at Northstar Commodity in Minneapolis, said the Plains states were getting more moisture, improving the outlook for the crops there. Wheat for May delivery fell 18 cents, or 2.5 percent, to $7.025 a bushel. Wheat had fallen for four straight days before that. May corn also fell, losing 5.25 cents to $7.0325 a bushel. Soybeans were the outlier among agricultural commodities. The May contract rose 18.5 cents to $14.62 a bushel. Prices for oil and key industrial metals fell Monday, as investors worried over U.S. spending cuts and a potential slowdown in China. Palladium for June delivery fell $5.95 to $714.45 per ounce. April platinum fell $7.30 to $1,566.20 per ounce. Benchmark oil for April delivery fell 56 cents to $90.12 a barrel in New York, a U-turn after two months of steep increases. The national average for a gallon of gas fell to $3.75 a gallon from $3.78 Friday. Brent crude, used to price many kinds of

Judge tells Penney company took risk

By Anne D'Innocenzio
Associated Press

NEW YORK — J.C. Penney, which is struggling with big losses and steep sales declines, could face another challenge: empty shelves.

New York State Supreme Court Judge Jeffrey Oing told Penney's attorneys on Monday that the chain took a risk by ordering towels, cookware and other products from the company that home diva Martha Stewart founded. In fact, Oing said he could force Penney to stop the products from heading to the shelves even as they come off the docks.

The judge's statements came during the start of the third week in a trial that pits J.C. Penney Co. against rival Macy's Inc. over their relationship with Martha Stewart Living Omnimedia Inc. At issue is whether Macy's has the exclusive right to sell some of Martha Stewart branded products such as cookware, bedding and bath.

Macy's has argued that Penney breached its

China targets satellite market

China is looking to increase its share of the global commercial satellite launching business, targeting a 15 percent share by 2020.

China has just 3 percent of the market now, but the goal laid out Saturday by a leading space program official points to its ambitions to be a major player in space.

The deputy head of the China Academy of Launch Vehicle Technology, Liang Xiaohong, told the official Xinhua News Agency that China hopes to accomplish that by establishing strategic alliances with major launch services providers and satellite manufacturers, along with developing its own technology.

Advice

Life in this ‘Modern Family’ is not a sitcom

Dear Amy: My dad and I have a mostly estranged relationship. He was absent most of my life, and now we only communicate through an occasional text message.

He is now married to wife No. 3, and up until a few months ago she seemed like a nice enough person — until he revealed that she had an affair and at 46 became pregnant with another man’s baby.

My father and she separated but have now reconciled and have decided to raise this baby together (my dad is 63), along with the man she had the affair with. I told him I respected his personal decision.

His wife recently asked to list me on Facebook as family, and I had such a negative reaction to it I blocked her completely. I only met her once years ago and have no personal connection to her.

Beans served any way good source of protein

Dear Heloise: In South Louisiana, where beans and rice are beloved staples, a potato smasher is known as a bean smasher.

My husband loves navy beans partly smashed into a creamy gravy, served with sausage over rice. He also loves red beans the same way. The bean smasher is invaluable in every Cajun kitchen.

— Jo in Louisiana

Dear Jo: Any way you serve them, I love beans, and they are a good source of protein.

I have a recipe for a delicious Tortellini and (kidney) Bean Soup that is included in my Heloise’s Spectacular Soups.

To receive a copy of this pamphlet, just send $5 and a long, self-addressed, stamped (66 cents) envelope to: Heloise/Soup, P.O. Box 795001, San Antonio, TX 78279-5001.

Did you know that there are more than 14,000 different types of beans? They don’t contain cholesterol and are low in fat.

Give me a bowl of Texas pinto beans and a slice of cornbread, and I’m a happy Texan!

— Heloise

I would like to visit my dad with my children. They have asked about him and despite the lack of relationship, I still love him and would like him to know his grandchildren.

However, I really don’t want anything to do with her or this child. I don’t want to have to explain the whole thing to my kids, adding to the already messy family dynamic.

I think this will offend my dad, as he takes his marriage vows very seriously from a religious perspective.

(He annulled the marriage from my mother and made his current wife get two annulments before they could marry.)

Am I out of line to ask to only see him when I visit?

— Daughter

Dear Daughter: Your father can’t take marriage vows all that seriously if he is on his third marriage, but regardless — he is embracing the existence of this child and is helping to raise it, which is the right thing to do, especially seeing as how the child’s mother is his wife.

So you come from a messed-up family. Join the club.

God created angels to watch over us

Dear Rev. Graham: I am 8 years old and I would like to know what angels look like. Do they have wings, and do they glow in the dark?

— A.Y.

Dear A.Y.: Thank you for your question, and I hope you’ll always want to find out what the Bible tells us about angels — and also what it says about everything else we need to know about God and His love for us.

Angels, the Bible tells us, are spiritual beings whom God created to help Him do His work in the world.

Because they are spiritual beings (instead of physical creatures), they usually are invisible to us, and they carry on most of their work without us ever being aware of them.

Even now, God’s angels are protecting us as we trust God to watch over us. The Bible says God “will command his angels concerning you to guard you in all your ways” (Psalm 91:11).

At times, however, God’s angels do become visible to us. Sometimes they appear as ordinary men.

From time to time, I hear reports of people who were rescued from danger by someone who suddenly

Absorption of vitamin B-12 may vary after procedures

Dear Dr. Roach: I had a vagotomy and antrectomy in 1980. I’m 76 now and for the past several years have been anemic.

My doctor gave me five B-12 shots, and I have been taking B-12 pills for the past 1 1/2 years. I also needed iron infusions.

The surgeon reported that because I’ve had an antrectomy and vagotomy, my body can’t absorb vitamin B-12 pills.

My family doctor says that’s not true. The surgeon, in whom I have total faith, suggests I go for B-12 shots every three months.

Whom do I believe, and what should I do?

— S.D.

Dear S.D.: The anterior part of the stomach makes gastrin, a hormone that helps the body absorb iron. This explains why you needed the iron infusions.

However, vagotomy and antrectomy together may reduce the stomach’s ability to make a protein called intrinsic factor, which helps absorb vitamin B-12.

Your surgeon is right; it’s much harder to absorb vitamin B-12 without intrinsic factor, and many people in your situation are treated with B-12 injections.

However, your family doctor is right, too. With enough vitamin B-12, 1,000 times more than you would need if everything worked perfectly, your body can absorb all the vitamin B-12 you need.

In a study that compared injection with high-dose oral B-12 in people with deficiency and difficulty absorbing, both worked very well at reversing the anemia.

I recommend oral vitamin B-12 for everybody in your situation. However, some people are very happy getting their injections (usually monthly) and don’t want to switch.

Dear Dr. Roach: Are Paget’s disease and multiple myeloma the same disease?

— D.I.

Dear D.I.: They are not the same disease. I can see why someone might think that, because Paget’s disease of the bone causes “holes” in the bone that can predispose a person to pain, deformities or fractures.

Nobody really knows why the cells that break down bone are activated in Paget’s disease — a virus has long been suspected but never proven.

Multiple myeloma, by contrast, is a cancer of plasma cells, which normally live in the bone marrow and make antibodies. These also cause “holes” in the bones that can lead to fracture.

Paget’s disease, if caught early, can be treated very effectively in most people with medication, usually the same medication used for osteoporosis.

Multiple myeloma, unfortunately, is much more difficult to treat, but cancer experts are devising ever more effective treatments for multiple myeloma.

Horoscope

TODAY’S BIRTHDAY (March 5). An artistic bent colors your year. Even your distractions will be productive. A serendipitous meeting that happens in the next three weeks will begin an adventure. In April, you’ll trade something you’ve had for a long time for an updated version. Finances improve in July. August brings a big break. Taurus and Gemini people adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 5, 30, 24, 49 and 50.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Because the times have changed so much, new rules are more than necessary; they are essential to an orderly existence. And you’ll be in a position to decide just what those rules should be.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). You’ll only follow methods that make sense to you. If you find yourself questioning each move a leader makes, it’s a sign that you’re following the wrong person.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). Your guiding planet, Mercury, is backing into an auspicious arrangement with Venus. This may inspire you to take an alternative route to love. Your game is atypical, and that’s precisely why it will work.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). You’ll hold on to high aspirations even while being swept into the demands of daily life. Certain low-level tasks must be handled if you’re to be a successful human being!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Weariness happens. It’s a function of working day after day, week after week without a break. Since you’ll be planning the future today, build a few breaks into the schedule to avoid future episodes of weariness.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). The Mercury retrograde will help you see a relationship more clearly. Taking things out of context can be quite effective in helping you get to a “eureka!” moment.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Someone might be sentimental about the way things used to be, but this is neither reasonable nor useful. So much has happened to change your approach. The best you can do is set an example by embracing the times.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). You’ll be happy for the temporary nature of some work. You’ll be glad when the jobs come, and today, even gladder to see them go. Think of today as character building. Tomorrow brings more satisfying endeavors.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). You’ll meet new people and form an immediate impression — like a line drawing in a coloring book. Subsequent information will color in the picture, but that initial form will hold true, so pay attention.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). A rebellious motive emerges in you. Why you suddenly have no desire to fall in line is a bit mysterious and perhaps a moot point. When you’re not into it, you’re not into it.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). No matter how well you think you know a person, there is always more to discover. And new people in your scene will be just the catalyst necessary to bring out a different side in someone you know well.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). A certain project requires skills you do not yet possess. Instead of looking for a partner to fill the role, get some training. You’ll find that you are more talented than you know!

In death, Facebook photos could fade away forever

■ Legislature, tech industry battling over access rights

By Lauren Gambino
Associated Press

BEAVERTON, Ore. — A grieving Oregon mother who battled Facebook for full access to her deceased son's account has been pushing for years for something that would prevent others from losing photos, messages and other memories — as she did.

“Everybody’s going to face this kind of a situation at some point in their lives,” says Karen Williams, whose 22-year-old son died in a 2005 motorcycle accident.

The Oregon Legislature responded and took up the cause recently with a proposal that would have made it easier for loved ones to access the “digital assets” of the deceased, only to be turned back by pressure from the tech industry, which argued that both a 1986 federal law and voluntary terms of service agreements prohibit companies from sharing a person’s information — even if such a request were included in a last will and testament.

Lobbyists agree the Stored Communications Act is woefully out of date but say that until it’s changed, laws passed at the state level could be unconstitutional.

“Everybody wants to do the right thing, but the hard legal reality is the federal communications act,” said Jim Hawley, a vice president at TechNet, an industry group that represents companies such as Google and Microsoft.

Oregon lawmakers moved ahead anyway with a proposal that would have given “digital assets” — everything from photos and messages stored online to intellectual property and banking information — the same treatment as material property for estate purposes.

“I think it’s time for us to really look at what we can do now,” said Democratic Sen. Floyd Prozanski after hearing Williams testify about her loss last month.

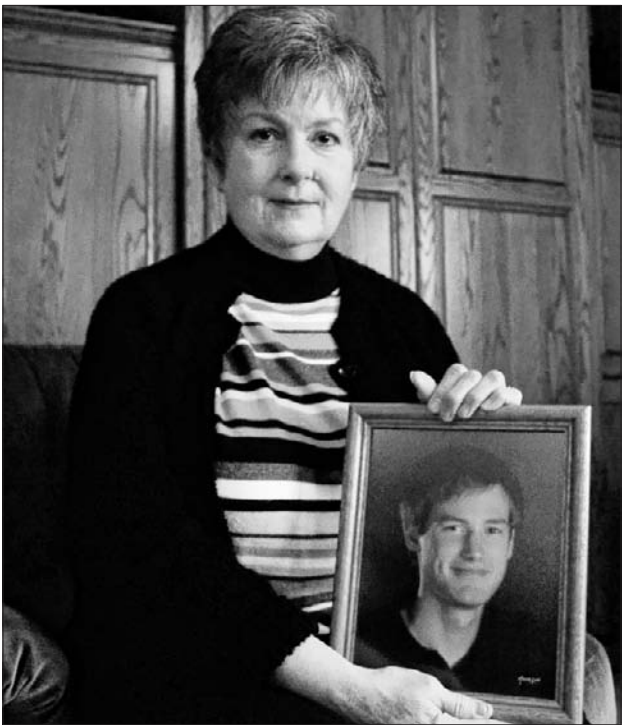

Two weeks later, however, language in the bill that would have covered social media accounts, from Facebook to Flickr, was stripped as tech lobbyists said the federal law and company privacy policies trumped anything that the bill would have included.

“I recognize the emotional toll these types of decisions can have on a family who’s lost a loved one,” Prozanski said Thursday. “But some of these issues may have to be addressed when we have more information than we currently have.”

Still, the problem persists and discussions on the issue are gaining momentum. As unlikely as such a case might be, even if a person willingly gives over login and password information to someone whom they authorize to access a given digital account, it would violate most terms of service agreements and both people could be charged with cybercrimes and face civil action from Internet companies under current law.

Currently, five states have digital assets laws, which vary widely. This group includes Oklahoma, which passed a law two years ago allowing estate lawyers to access digital assets, even social media accounts. That measure did not face the opposition that has emerged in Oregon.

“There is some question

if laws like the one we passed in Oklahoma, would stand up to a challenge by Facebook and Gmail saying their terms of service agreements supersede laws like this one and the one being discussed in Oregon,” said Ryan Kiesel, a former Oklahoma legislator who wrote the law.

“That’s a question that remains to be answered,” he added.

Several other states, including Nebraska — guided in part by the story of Williams’ 22-year-old son, Loren — are also considering proposals. And the Uniform Law Commission, a non-profit, non-partisan group that writes model legislation for states to help standardize laws around the nation, is examining the issue.

“This law is a real need as we have moved into a digital world,” said Lane Shetterly, an Oregon attorney and a representative on the commission’s drafting committee. The group is responsible for standardizing a range of legislation, including commercial transaction regulations and child custody laws.

Proponents say the need is clear. Without clarity or direction, the digital information left behind by a deceased person can spark emotional legal battles, pitting big business against devastated families. And as more and more memories are being stored online, new tools are necessary to make sure loved ones can easily access personal details that could be lost forever.

“If this were a box of letters under his bed, no one would have thought twice,” Williams said.

Months after the death of her first-born son, who was away at college in Arizona, Williams found comfort in his Facebook page. There, she was able to click through photos and letters that helped ease the pain of her loss — for two hours.

She learned of the page from his friends and wanted access to his memories to keep them from being deleted, which was Facebook’s policy at the time. Unaware of Internet privacy regulations, she reached out to Facebook for help. As she waited for a response, one of his friends provided a tip that helped her discover his password. “It was like a gift,” she said.

Shortly after, however, the site’s administrators changed the password, citing company policy in denying her. Williams sued and won, but she never received the full access she sought. Eventually, the account was taken down. In the end, she gained little more than a symbolic victory and a role as champion of a cause that didn’t exist before the digital age.

Kiesel, the former Oklahoma lawmaker, says the various attempts at legislation have sparked a long overdue conversation about estate planning for digital assets.

“I think that, because of the wide prevalence of online accounts and digital property, the federal government will ultimately need to pass some legislation that provides greater uniformity,” he said.

Do You Suffer with Depression?

Most people have felt sad or depressed at times. But when feelings of intense sadness – including symptoms of fatigue, difficulty concentrating, feelings of worthlessness/guilt and sleep/appetite disturbances – last for days to weeks, your depression may be something more than sadness. It may very well be clinical depression – a treatable medical condition.

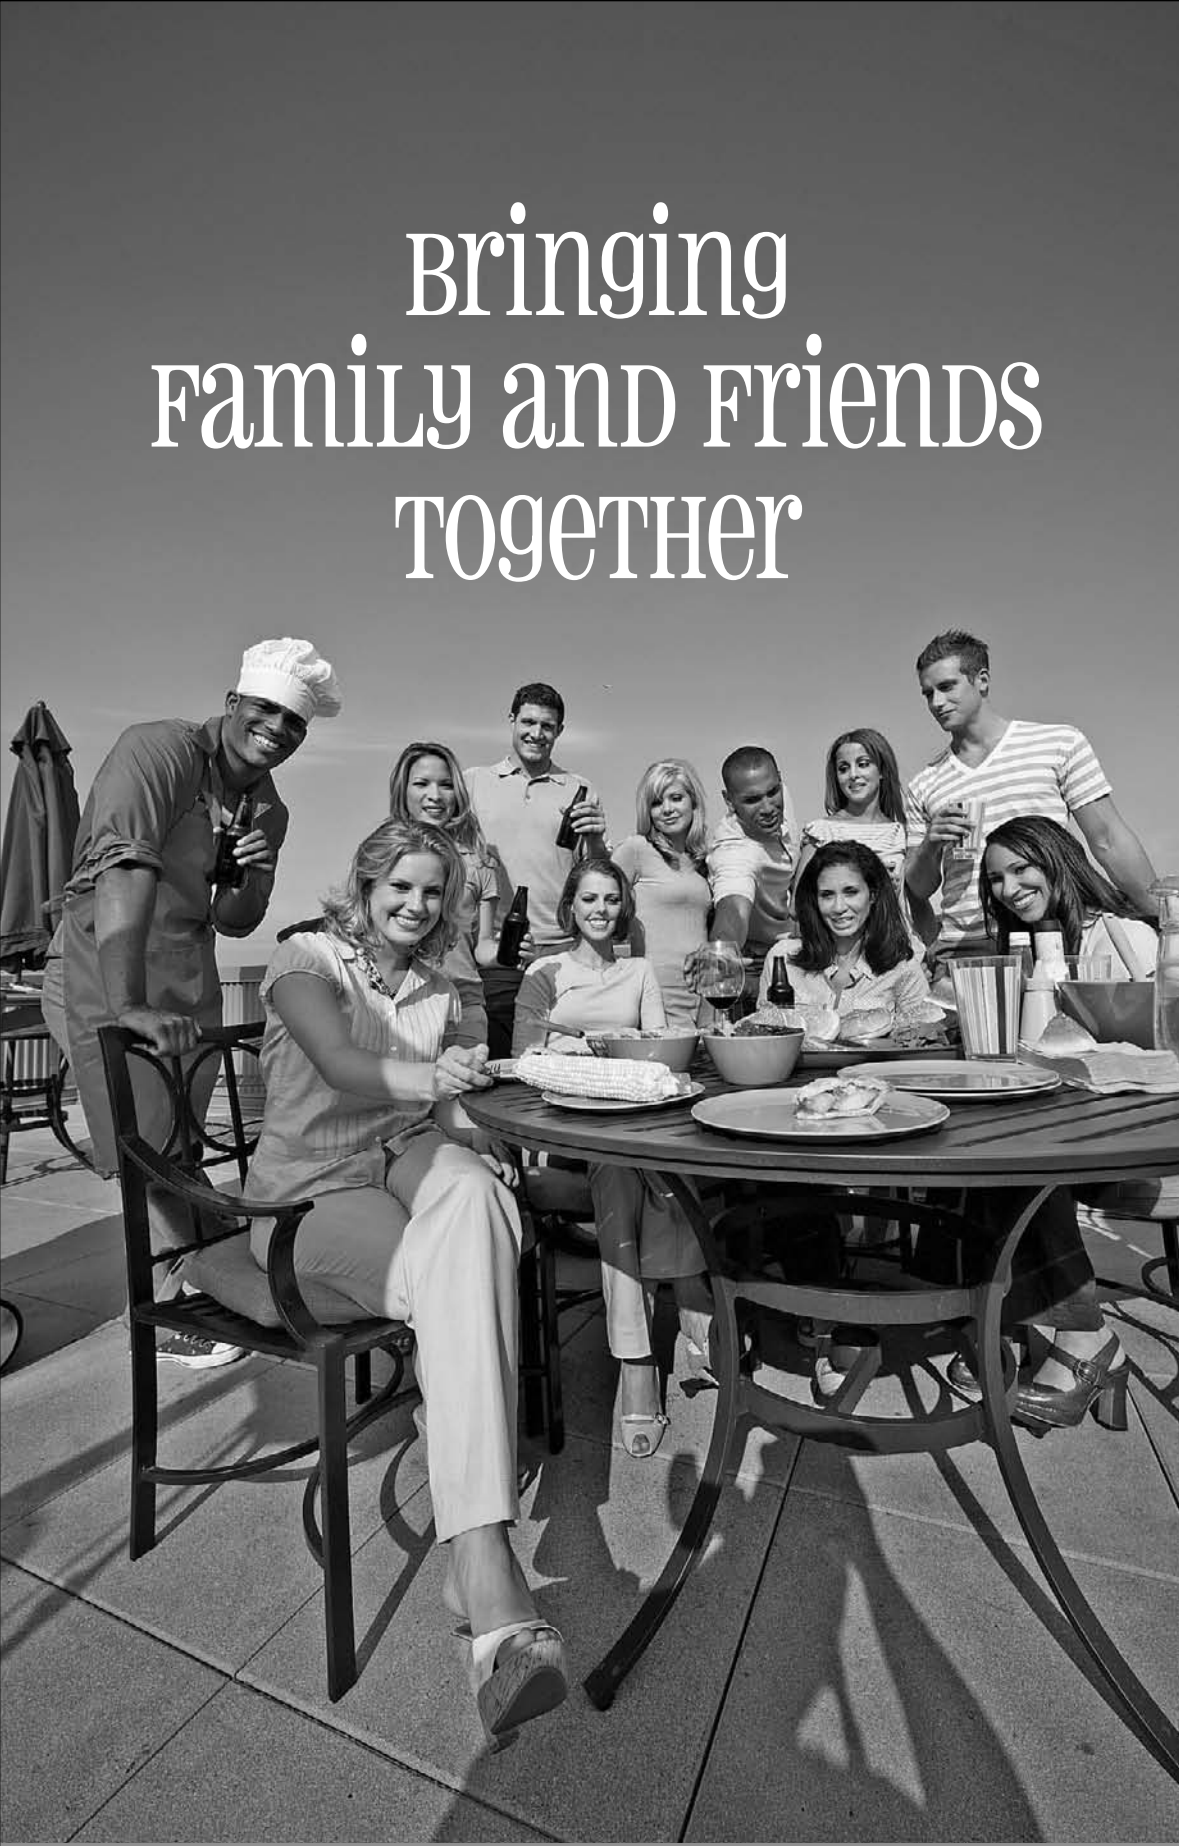

If you or someone you know is currently taking medication for depression, yet wish their medication would help them more, you may qualify for a national clinical research trial conducted at Deaconess Clinic. Participation includes study-related physical evaluation and study medication at no cost; and compensation for participation. You must be at least 18 years old to qualify.

Health insurance is not required for participation.

To see if you qualify or to receive more information, please call the Research InfoLine at 812-474-7184 or toll free at 1-877-654-0311.

Today in history

The Associated Press

Today is Tuesday, March 5, the 64th day of 2013. There are 301 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On March 5, 1963, country music performers Patsy Cline, Cowboy Copas and Hawkshaw Hawkins died in the crash of their plane, a Piper Comanche, near Camden, Tenn., along with pilot Randy Hughes (Cline's manager).

On this date:

In 1770, the Boston Massacre took place as British soldiers who'd been taunted by a crowd of colonists opened fire, killing five people.

In 1934, the first Mothers-in-Law Day celebration and parade took place in Amarillo, Texas.

In 1946, Winston Churchill delivered his "Iron Curtain" speech at Westminster College in Fulton, Mo.

In 1953, Soviet dictator Josef Stalin died after three decades in power. Composer Sergei Prokofiev died in Moscow at age 61.

In 1982, comedian John Belushi was found dead of a drug overdose in a rented bungalow in Hollywood; he was 33.

In 1983, Country Music Television (CMT) made its debut with the video "It's Four in the Morning," performed by Faron Young.

Ten years ago: A suicide bus bombing in Haifa, Israel, killed 17 people, including an American teenager. A Kuwaiti policeman was sentenced to 15 years in prison for a 2002 attack that wounded two U.S. soldiers on a Kuwaiti desert highway.

Five years ago: John McCain, having sewn up the Republican presidential nomination, got a White House embrace from President George W. Bush, who praised the Arizona senator's "incredible courage and strength of character and perseverance."

One year ago: Songwriter Robert B. Sherman, 86, who'd collaborated with his brother Richard on such movie musicals as "Mary Poppins" and "Chitty Chitty Bang Bang," died in London.

THINK ABOUT IT

"To force opinion is like pushing the magnetized needle round by brute strength until it points to where we wish the North Star stood, rather than to where it really is."

— Dorothy Canfield Fisher, American author and essayist (1879-1958).

BEST BETS

7 p.m. on 7
Hart of Dixie

Zoe (Rachel Bilson) becomes overly protective of Rose (McKaley Miller) and her boyfriend as a result of trying to keep her own feelings toward Wade (Wilson Bethel) in check. Suspicion falls on Wade when money goes missing from the church's casino fundraiser, where he's working with Lavon (Cress Williams). Lemon (Jaime King) tries to sabotage Brick and Shelby (Tim Matheson, Laura Bell Bundy) in the new episode "We Are Never Ever Getting Back Together."

8 p.m. on 14
Go On

Ryan (Matthew Perry) drowns his sorrows in gambling after his breakup with Simone (Piper Perabo), a habit that escalates when he gets his wife's life insurance check. Lauren (Laura Benanti) snaps him out of it by beating him soundly at poker. Afterward, he finds a kindred spirit in Anne (Julie White), who's just suffered her own romantic disappointment, in the new episode "Double Down."

8 p.m. on 1
Dance Moms

Before leaving for a competition in which their group number has a love theme, the moms try to make a love match for Abby at a speed-dating event, hoping that if she's in a relationship, she'll be easier to work with. Jill tries to get private lessons for Kendall so she'll outdo Nia in a duet in the new episode "All's Fair in Love and War."

8 p.m. on 13
College Basketball

A battle of Big Ten rivals is on tap tonight at Assembly Hall in Bloomington, where top-ranked Indiana defends home court from No. 13 Ohio State. The Hoosiers, who are led by sophomore forward Cody Zeller and junior guard Victor Oladipo, hope to land one of the top seeds in the NCAA Tournament later this month. The Buckeyes, whose top players are junior forward Deshaun Thomas and junior guard Lenzelle Smith Jr., would like to prove they can beat the Hoosiers.

9 p.m. on 14
Smash

Tom (Christian Borle) shares his suspicions about Peter (Daniel Sunjata) with Julia (Debra Messing), and he's not alone: Karen (Katharine McPhee) also wonders if she can trust him. Jimmy and Kyle (Jeremy Jordan, Andy Mientus) are on pins and needles as "Hit List" gets its first reading. Ivy (Megan Hilty) meets her new co-star, Terry Falls (Sean Hayes, "Will & Grace"), in the new episode "The Read-Through."

9 p.m. on 17
Cougar Town

When her dad (Ken Jenkins) stays at her house to recuperate from an injury, Jules (Courteney Cox) has some severe stomach pains, which she stubbornly keeps secret from him. Bobby and Grayson (Brian Van Holt, Josh Hopkins) have some lessons for Travis (Dan Byrd) in the new episode "Make It Better." Busy Philipps also stars.

9 p.m. on 11
White Collar

Neal and Peter (Matt Bomer, Tim DeKay) are one heist away from retrieving the evidence box hidden inside the Empire State Building. Meanwhile, Sen. Pratt (Titus Welliver) has enlisted a small army of FBI agents to find the box before Neal does in the season finale, "In the Wind."

9:30 p.m. on 11
Double Divas

Women have enough trouble finding the right size bra for themselves, so imagine how much more difficult it is for their menfolk. Molly and Cynthia don't have to imagine; they know, based on the number of returns they get from ladies who have been gifted with the wrong size. To remedy the situation, they throw a party for guys to teach them all about sizing in the new episode "Bra Boot Camp for Boys."

9:31 p.m. on A
Movie: The Transporter

Delivering items becomes much more dangerous for a former Special Forces operative (Jason Statham, "The Italian Job") in this breakneck-paced 2002 adventure, which uses the Far East style of movie action. The courier violates his usual "no questions asked" credo when he finds his latest cargo is a bound and gagged woman (Qi Shu) — putting him at odds with his employer and the "package's" intended recipient.

10 p.m. on 44.2
House

In "Honeymoon," House (Hugh Laurie) struggles with saving Stacy's (guest star Sela Ward) husband and with his own emotions. Her return has stirred up some powerful feelings, and he wonders if he is completely over her. Lisa Edelstein, Omar Epps and Jennifer Morrison also star.

10:02 p.m. on 11
Vikings

Michael Hirst ("The Tudors") is creator and writer of this nine-part scripted series about the lives and adventures of legendary Viking warriors. It follows Ragnar Lothbrok (Travis Fimmel), a young farmer and family man, charting his ambitions to discover civilizations across the great ocean to the west as well as his inevitable conflicts along the way. Gabriel Byrne co-stars as chieftain Earl Haraldson. Jessalyn Gilsig and Kathryn Winnick are also in the cast.
